THE DEMOCRATS AGAIN.
Speech of Robert A. Miller, Candidate For Congress.

HIS CLAIMS FOR THE OFFICE.
The second gathering of the local Democracy took place last evening, when their candidate for congress, Robert A. Miller, appeared as the speaker. The band paraded the streets, and a little before eight o'clock a fair audience was present at the opera house, but not nearly as many as on the occasion of the governor's appearance, a week ago.

Seated upon the stage were C. J.
Trenchard, John H. Smith, C. R.
Thomson, A. H. Sale, Dr. O. B. Estes, Martin Olsen, Capt. J. E. Campbell, Chris. Sorenson and John Kopp.
In the boxes were Geo. Noland and wife, P. W. Weeks and wife, Rev. F.
O. Weeks, I. B. Elton and family, J.
E. Kearney, O. W. Dunbar and Geo.
Hibbert.

Uttinger's band was seated in the orchestra and previous to the meeting filled the house with melodious melody from their harmonious instruments.
There were two people in the audience who though very young and unknown to fame, had more to say than any one except the speaker of the evening, or at least made more noise than any one else, and at times it was hard to tell whether they or the speaker was entitled to the floor, as he had to contend for the mastery. One of them was silenced by the maternal foot, but the other carried the day, for the mother had to carry her out, and the audience in that vicinity then listened to the speaker on the platform.

At three minutes to eight o'clock, County Clerk C. J. Trenchard stepped forward and stated that they were disappointed in not having Mr. Wager present, but he had great pleasure in introducing the next congressman, Robert A. Miller.

Mr. Miller is a young man of favorable appearance, of medium size, with a bright, clear eye, and pleasant voice, and an excellent speaker, using good language, and at times quite flowery and poetical, and fairly eloquent. While there were many good things said by him, they were more of the style of a 4th of July oration than of a Democratic speech, and with a few slight changes it could have been designated a Republican speech.

In opening he complimented the people of Astoria for the advancement and progress made, and claimed that with the coming of the railroad and continued energy on the part of the railroad it was destined to be a grand city.

He had wondered why Oregon, an empire in extent, had so much uncultivated land in its eastern portion, where for many miles are seen no houses, fences or marks of cultivation.
But in going down the grand Columbia river and seeing the bar to navigation at the cascades it was all clear to him, and with the proper legislation to have the entire river open to commerce, Astoria would soon become a second San Francisco.

For this reason, and to accomplish this result, the people here must make a change in the national policy, and the representatives in congress, who he claimed that enough money had been appropriated to have cleared the river entirely of all obstructions, but still they had not been removed.
Somehow, at some place, and by somebody a great wrong has been done by the failure of three representatives in the national congress after twenty-five years of effort, to open the river to navigation.

The proposition to construct a boat railway at an enormous expense, and to be 35 years in doing it he claimed was preposterous. He said: "If you agree to this, you will sit still 35 years and let Washington overgrow and overturn you with its numerous cities around Puget sound, and its immense commerce thereon. Make no mistake in the men you send to congress, and to your state legislature.
If you people here realized how much there is at stake in this you would not be so inactive."

"The railroads centering in Portland are greatly responsible for the delay in clearing the Columbia of obstructions, as it is all the better for them. They want it all to grow, and do not want any city or section to monopolize the growth and prosperity of the balance. I want Astoria, Eugene, Salem, Albany and other cities to grow as well as Portland. No question before you is more important than this."

He then referred to himself as a representative of his party and a candidate for the suffrages of the Democrats, but Republicans, believing that he had honesty and ability for the position to which he aspired, and if elected would endeavor to serve the people faithfully and earnestly.

A long time was occupied in speaking on the tariff question claiming that two years ago the Republicans prophesied that if the Democrats came in power, with their peculiar ideas of tariff, the wages of mechanics and wage earners would go down to the level of the ill paid pauper rate of the foreign laborers. He charged Carnegie with cutting down the wages of his employes three months after Harrison's election, and the Republican party with being to blame for the poverty and hard times last winter among the workmen of San Francisco, the city of wealth where it had been said there was no poverty.

Free trade was then alluded to at considerable length, and heroic efforts made to convince the audience that the position of his party on the tariff question was right, that the Republican party was wrong, that his side wanted duty reduced from 47 to 35 per cent, and that was not free trade.

He went back to the book of Genesis, the Roman empire and claimed that all through the world there had been no tariff. Many of the audience seemed bewildered in trying to understand the object of this long detour, and quite a number went out, possibly to see if they could find the other end of the story outside.

In referring to Binger Hermann, he said: "My competitor is not here now to speak for himself, but he is in congress, and you frequently hear of him in the papers in the telegrams he sends there. He is now trying to establish some little port down the coast at a place no one ever heard of, and at another time is endeavoring to clear out some little stream away up in the Cascades, instead of important legislation. It is strange that even these officials should be made now, but then it appears that seldom is anything done except just before election."

"I fear I am wearying you, but I did not expect to have all the talking to do to-night, and I have already done so much to-day coming down on the boat, but Mr. Wager did not come.
You expected to hear the silver-tongued orator, but he is the other fellow, who is not here."

Apparently unconscious that it was the work of the Republican party, he spoke of the grand work accomplished in the past, when the fetters had been struck from millions of slaves, and claimed that the gyves and fetters from thousands of years ago, the business men, the farmers and the wage earners of the land, and wondered how many centuries must pass ere the time would come when they would be struck off.

He spoke of three political parties asking for votes, the Democrats, Republican and Labor, claiming that the former stands between the other two, is no extreme, but holds a legal view, in favor of honest currency, and a dollar should be of the same value whether in the hands of the business man, the laborer or the banker.

"As for myself, I believe in the doctrine, the greatest good to the greatest number. I do not believe in prohibition, and I have already done so much to-day coming down on the boat, but I believe that is going too far, as every man should be left free to decide for himself. I do not think a man should get drunk. As for me, I have a fine vineyard in Southern Oregon where we make some good wine, and if any of you come over here, you are welcome to sample it with me."

A high compliment was paid to the grandest exponent of Republican principles ever known on this coast, Abraham Lincoln, which name elicited considerable applause from the many Republicans in the audience. His sentiment "A government of the people, by the people and for the people" was highly endorsed by the speaker, who claimed that it was similar in sentiment to his idea of the greatest good to the greatest number.

Union soldiers were spoken of in complimentary terms and the claim made that the Democrats of the present day demand the removal of the soldiers from this city, and that the Republicans are more kind to them than are the Democrats.

The pilot schooner Gov. Moody was referred to as being tied up here the fault of Republicans and of the present candidate on that state ticket who had promised to see that it was maintained in service as intended.

"Republicans dwell on their past record and the glory of their achievements, but no real leader of the war will build one mile of railroad, one steamboat, or tunnel your mountains.
I would not take anything from their glory. Let them rest in their quiet graves honored and revered for the grand work they have done. The past with all its beauty and patriotism is behind us."

"The present meets us now, and claims our attention. Go with me under that starry banner which makes men march, marching onward in one grand phalanx, moving forward to a better condition of humanity. Let us go as one grand people, under one flag and with one sentiment, Americans all. Let patriotism, love of country and love of the human race, the grandest sense of the word be our aim and ambition. Vote for the best men and let prejudice and party die out once and forever."

He thought that a political revolution was at hand, that Ohio change of 20,000 votes was a good omen.
"Rhode Island is now a Democratic state, Iowa has wheeled into line, and we can change Oregon. Do your duty on the 21st of June, and the 2,000 majority will not be their's but ours.
Oregon has never prospered so well as in the last four years. The record of our party is before you, and we claim it is good. With a firm reliance on your judgment at the coming election, we place ourselves in your hands. I thank you, for your attention." Mr. Miller's speech lasted just an hour and a half, and whether he intended to do so or not, he certainly did the Republican party many compliments. It fact he had but little to say of the usual brilliant claims made for the Democratic party by the auditors.

The band played up most of the audience was retiring, and the balance were thanked by C. J. Trenchard, and dismissed. Mr. Miller was escorted to the Occident hotel by the band and his friends.

Nothing in Reserve.

Of all the thousands of cases of salmon on the U. P. dock not a case of genuine Columbia river salmon is to be found among the thousands of cases in San Francisco of Chinook salmon. - Astorian.

Our esteemed contemporary, usually bold and outspoken seems to have something to say in regard to the salmon does not sound like the enterprising and independent Astorian. Why it has not told the whole story we cannot understand. But it certainly has left the way clear for the inference that there is something fishy about that salmon up there on the U. P. dock. As for the San Francisco part of our neighbor's announcement, we are prepared to endorse the statement that there is not a thousand cases of salmon on the local market outside of jobbing stocks. How much salmon is there on the U. P. dock, what is its quality and what would be a fair market price for the lot? - Herald of Trade and Commerce and Canoeer, St. L.

There is nothing "in reserve." The point Tide Astorian made was that Columbia river salmon always finds a ready market. The 30,000 cases of salmon on the U. P. dock is all right, and is good salmon, but if it was Columbia river salmon it wouldn't be there, that's all. The salmon on the U. P. dock is as good as any outside salmon, that is as good as any salmon that is not Columbia river salmon. As to the price that is difficult to determine. If our San Francisco neighbor wants to buy it it is probable that no reasonable offer will be refused. Salmon is always worth what it will fetch.

On the Sacramento.

The Contra Costa (Cal) Gazette says: The strike of the fishermen's union against the canneries has at last terminated, and a compromise has been effected satisfactory to both. On Monday the fishermen were selling salmon to the cannery at this place in large numbers, and several teams were employed in hauling the same. The catch on Monday was unusually large, and upwards of 1,000 salmon were landed at the wharves. Of this number, between three and four hundred were shipped to the city, and the cannery landed the remainder. The terms of the compromise as near as can be ascertained, are three cents per pound and an agreement on the part of the cannery to take the entire catch or as near as possible. The run of fish is good at present, and if it continues times will be lively in this industry. The fishermen have acted sensibly by compromising matters with the canneries, but for a time it looked as though they would stand firm and demand the terms of the strike, which was four cents a pound, or cease fishing altogether. The salmon along the straits are said to be in better condition than those taken in the river, many of the fish landed on Monday weighing as much as twenty-five pounds. The fishermen, now that the difficulty is settled, are getting down to steady business, being anxious to make up for lost time, and if no further trouble arises, there is no doubt of the cannery wanting for fish during the spring run.

The eight annual convention of the of Oregon is in session at Portland, having commenced yesterday and will from this city and whose names are ney, Mrs. Wm. S. Kinney and Mrs. Dr.

Owens-Adair.

It was rumored last evening that a man named Hodge, an employee on the Astoria and South Coast railroad, while on Young's river was drowned.
Diligent inquiry failed to verify the statement, and it is, hoped it is not correct.

Supremely Delightful
To the emaciated and debilitated, invalid the sense of returning health and strength produced by Hostetter's Stomach Bitters.
When that promoter of vigor is tested by persons in feeble health, its restorative and invigorating qualities are evinced in improved appetite, digestion and nightly repose, the sole conditions of health, strength and nerve quietude is vouchsafed to the human system. A gain in flesh of shadow, the footsteps of declining strength, when the premature decadence of vitality is not arrested, Marasmus, consumption and other wasting maladies are prompt to fasten upon the emaciated. Avert disease, shadow the footstep of declining strength, which not only renews failing strength, but mitigates and counteracts the infirmities of age and those of the gentler sex. Rheumatism, malaria, liver and kidney troubles yield to it.

CAPITAL PUNISHMENT.

Views of Senator Ingalls, of Kansas.

We are all under sentence of death.
By some mysterious and inexorable laws it is appointed for all men to die.
Other incidents may or may not occur, but death is inevitable. There is no reprieve, no new trial, no pardon, no executive clemency. Life, the most sacred of all natural rights, is the one of which all are deprived by an arbitrary decree of nature. The verdict is pronounced and judgment rendered before we are born.

The right of man to live is sacred and incontestable, and yet it may be renounced. If I am attacked, I have the right to kill my assailant, if his death is necessary for the preservation of my own life. This is not denied by any code of morals or of laws. Life may be legally taken not only in self-defense, but in the protection of property, of honor, and the state. If the right to live exists, then the right to live is forfeited, because two contradictory rights affecting the same individual can not coexist.

Civil governments are established among other objects, to dispense with private vengeance, and to punish crimes against individuals as offenses against the social compact. The citizen relinquishes his right to kill the man who has slain his father, his brother, his wife or his friend, upon the agreement that society shall avenge the wrong and punish the offender.

This seems to be the rational justification of the death penalty, which has been universally recognized from the beginning of history.

And yet it can not be denied that as the conscience of nations becomes more sensitive and the sacredness of life more apparent its infliction grows more repulsive. Tribunals, juries and legislatures are perceptibly reluctant to enforce the fatal right of retaliation.
Limitations are imposed. The condemned criminal becomes the object of excessive and inexplicable sympathy.
Philanthropy strives to devise less terrible methods of execution. The barbarous torture of the stake, the gibbet, the wheel, of beheading and mutilation, once deemed essential to the safety of society, are regarded with horror, and have been definitely abandoned. Humanity shudders at the contemplation, and inquires whether the sacrifice of life is not indefensible if the isolation of the felon is sufficient for the protection of the state from the crime.

The public sentiment for the abolition of capital punishment is evidently growing stronger in the annals of the civilized world. For political offenses, except in actual war, it has been finally suppressed. Had Waterloo occurred two centuries earlier, Napoleon would have been sent to the block instead of to St. Helena.

The right of government to inflict the death penalty must be conceded.
The objects of punishment are to reform the offender and to protect society. The idea of vengeance has been eliminated. No gentleman can be considered as reformed by being hanged, and the only remaining consideration, therefore, is that of social utility. This is debatable ground, and is not susceptible of demonstration. There are some incorrigible and predestined criminals, the wolves, tigers and cobras of the human race, whose execution gives general satisfaction; but the victims of heredity, of sudden rage, of ungovernable impulse are regarded with compassion.
The indications are strong that society will ultimately be re-enforced with sufficient intellectual and moral guarantees to enable it to dispense with this supreme penalty.

At present the general conscience would probably reject the sentiment of the challenged jurymen in Montana, who declared that he was opposed to capital punishment, except when inflicted by the vigilance committee.

The legislature of Kansas has adopted the ingenious device of ordering criminals condemned to death to be confined for one year after sentence to the penitentiary, and then executed at the pleasure of the governor. The result is the accumulation of a job lot of convicted felons, whose lives having been judiciously forfeited, instead of being abbreviated, are indefinitely prolonged by improved diet, scientific sanitary regulations, and enforced good habits, at the expense of the state.

Villard Holds the Winning Hand.

The masters of finance in New York have had another deal, and Villard holds the winning hand, this time to the discomfort of the elder Gould and the probable displacement of the younger from the presidency of the Pacific Mail company. This, together with the indications that Huntington is Villard's partner in the game, assures advantages to the commerce of the Pacific northwest that can scarcely be overestimated. Tacoma will come in as an additional Pacific Mail port, dividing the advantages of the original trade with San Francisco.
While the exclusion of the Union Pacific from the Pacific Mail combination will only hasten the establishment of its independent steamship line between Portland and Astoria. The deal is an important one for the northwest, and one which the entire section should be congratulated upon. - *Ore-

A Story With a Moral.

There is a moral in the following story, says the St. Paul Pioneer Press.
It is true, and it is applicable to every position in the commercial, literary or professional world. It will apply to the most eminent lawyer and to the clerk in a corner grocery. A young St.
Paul man applied to a well-known merchant in this city for the position of assistant bookkeeper. He was asked what salary he expected, and replied:

"Eighteen dollars a week."
"We had decided not to pay more than $15," demurred the merchant.
"Well, sir," answered the young man frankly, "I need the position, but you must remember I should work just as hard if you paid me but $5 a week."

"All right, sir," replied the merchant, with a approving smile, "you are just the kind of man we want. Go to work to-morrow at - $20 a week."
