The Accidents on the Eiffel Tower and Forth Bridge.

The great monsters of mechanical skill and genius call for the sacrifice of a great deal of life and limb in their construction. The greater the engineering feat, the more extensive is the tower, for instance, twenty-six lives were lost, according to the official re-turns of the French government, but it is said that this number would be largely augmented if the names were given of men who died from injuries given of men who died from injuries received during the construction of the tower and of others who were killed and whose deaths were not reported, owing to the hue-and-cry which was raised after the first two dozen lives had been sacrificed on the great structure. The number of men who were injured during the contraction of the contr ber of men who were injured dur ing the construction of the Eiffel tower has been placed at 6,000. The govern-ment has already given an order for 100,000 shells for the Hotehkiss gun and Shrapnel shells as soon as facilties for their manufac-ture, under the patent of ture, under the patent of Lieutenant Wood, U. S. N., are ready. By the new process the shells, instead of being made of cast iron and boxed Which will be sold at lowest rates, whole-sale and retail.

In the construction of the Eiffel

Special attention given to supplying chilled point and but to a section of soft iron pipe, and in the case of Shrapnel shells, the trouble of graduating the thickness with calipers, after boring and adjusting the deli-cately poised diaphragm between the powder and the bullets, is greatly liminished.
