THE PRINCESS OF WALES

How She Appears in Her Yachting Gown.

ENJOYING SUMMER LIFE.

LONDON, May 6th, '90.

Permit me to present to you to-day "Meedames" her Royal Highness the Princess of Wales as she appears in a recent photograph, for which she sat in her newest Redfern yachting gown. It is of white Isle of Wight serge, the striped portions of the waist and sleeves being formed by rows of dark blue Hercules braid, every row of which is finished by a gilt anchor button, as though it were a striped vest buttoned on to the bodice. A black or dark blue kerchief of silk is passed carelessly about the neck and its ends are slipped through an onyx ring, and then pinned low on the breast with a white enamel burgee. At the throat she wears the flag brooch of the Royal Yacht Squadron of which Club the Prince has been for many years the commodore.

Arrayed in such a costume as this, of which she generally orders a half dozen or more at a time from her favorite tailor, "Redfern," the Princess goes down to Cowes a short time before the Goodwood races, and there spends on board the royal yacht, Osborne, some two months of idyllic, outdoor life under blue skies and warm sunbeams, and invigorated by the fresh salt breezes which blow from Spithead and Cowes Roads.

"Can the visitors of Cowes get a glimpse of the Royal party," I asked Redfern the other day.

"Oh yes, easily. The yacht is moored about a half mile off the shore and any one can take a boat and row around it. Why, I was rowing about one day, and I saw the Prince in his shirt sleeves vigorously laboring with two hair brushes, at his morning toilet, just like any country squire."

"Doesn't he have a valet on his yacht?" "Oh, of course, but he was probably occupied in taking the Princess's dogs ashore for their daily scamper. She has three—a white Pomeranian, a fine collie, and a queer Russian creature given her by her sister, the Empress, and every day they are rowed ashore by a crew of man-of-war's men, to give them a run and a frolic."

And the Princess is as simple and unaffected as possible, and amuses herself with as little ostentation as any of her well-bred subjects would do. She often takes a small Una, what you would call a catboat over here, and sails about by the hour, quite alone. When her children were younger, the young Princes were taught to row and to fish, and there was a large floating bath for them and their sisters, placed just opposite Osborne House. The weeks spent there each summer are probably almost the pleasantest part of the year to the Princess, as being so healthful, and so free from care and ceremony."

AN IMPORTANT CAPTURE.

Opium Smugglers Arrested at Seattle With $660 Worth of the Drug.

SEATTLE, May 31.—An important capture was made by Lieutenant Willard at an early hour this morning that may lead to the captnre of the bold gang of smugglers that have been operating on Puget sound for some time past.

Friday night United States custom inspector Holden received word from Victoria that George Dickson had left that city for Tacoma, having in his possession a large quantity of opium. Inspector Holden at once notified Lieutenant Willard to look out for the man in case he should land here, and when the Olympian arrived he boarded her and started for Tacoma.

It seems, however, that Dickson became aware that officers were on his track, and landed at Seattle. Lieutenant Willard was watching for him, but having only a meagre desoription he nearly missed him. The lieutenant saw a man just as he was leaving the wharf, who appeared to be heavily loaded down with packages, and followed him. Not being a United States officer, he had no authority to search him for opium. He arrested Dickson, however, on suspicion of having stolen the goods in his possession, took him to headquarters and searched him. He was found to be fairly loaded down with opium. There was thirty pounds of the stuff in quarter-tael boxes on his person. Dickson was locked up and the opium turned over to inspector Holden on his return from Tacoma this morning.

Dickson will come up for a preliminary examination before United States Commissioner Emery this afternoon. Dickson has been on the Sound some time, and Inspector Holden says he has been watching his movements, although he has not been able up to the present time to catch him at any crooked work.

Opium costs in Victoria $8 per pound. There is a duty of $10 per pound and it retails in this city at $22 per pound. This would make $660 worth of opium which Dickson had concealed in his clothing when he was arrested.—Oregonian Special.

An ingenious machine will soon be introduced on passenger cars which is shaped like a Hammond type writer, oval on one side and flat on the other, and is operated like the type writer. The object of this novel instrument is to make it impossible for the conductor to "knock down" fares. The passenger presents his ticket to the conductor, who reads the name on it and puts it in the machine, at the same time punching the letters of the name on the ticket. There is a bright piece of steel at which the passenger looks as the conductor writes his name. When the conductor has finished punching a small peg, a bell rings and a small piece of gutta percha shuts over the steel plate. In a few seconds the work is done and a perfect photograph of the passenger is taken, the amount of the ticket registered on the back, and the name of the passenger printed above the amount. The whole thing can be done in three seconds and is the most complete thing yet gotten out.

Protect the System from Malaria.

It is possible to do this even in regions of country where miasma is most rife, and where the periodic fevers which it causes assume their most formidable types. The immense popularity of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters is very largely attributable to the fact of its efficacy as a remedy for chills and fever, bilious remittents, and as a preventive of the various forms of malarial disease. In those portions of the west and south where complaints of this nature prevail, and in the tropics, it is particularly esteemed for the protective influence which it exerts; and it has been very widely adopted as a substitute for the dangerous and comparatively ineffective alkaloid, sulphate of quinine. Physicians have not been among the last to concede its merits, and the emphatic professional indorsements which it has received have added to the reputation it has obtained at home and abroad.

A STRANGE STORY.

Sudden Return of a Supposed Dead Man.

IDENTIFICATION OF CORPSE.

RALEIGH, N. C., May 27.—Twelve months ago James Dillon, a well-known citizen of Tyrrell county, insured his life for $4,000 in the Connetticut Mutual Life Insurance Company. Some time after he fell from a boat, feigned inability to swim and had to be pulled out of the Alligator river to prevent drowning.

The next day he overturned his boat half a mile from shore and yelled loudly for a man a quarter of a mile away. When the man responded Dillon secretly swam ashore and could not be seen. The man whose assistance he had asked supposed that he was drowned and was perfectly willing to swear to it.

Notice of Dillon's death was sent to the company, which refused to pay the insurance. Action was brought by Dillon's wife, and the case stood for trial at court last week, the widow alleging that he was drowned. Ten days ago a body was found near the place where he had been seen to sink in the water. The body was identified by twenty-five persons as that of Dillon. At court, counsel for the wife took a non-suit, because before the body had been found the evidence of death and identification was favorable to the company, who wrote that they would do as advised by their attorney in the county.

There is no doubt that the company would have paid the money, but last Friday, to the surprise of every one, Dillon himself returned safe and sound to Columbia. Hearing of the non-suit he thought it put an end to his claim and that there was no hope of collecting the money, and so he returned home.

His statement is most remarkable. He says that he swam ashore the day he overturned the boat. He put his hat in the boat and left the craft full of water. He determined to hide in the woods so that his wife could get the insurance money. He kept in the great swamps for five months, when he found the body of a dead man floating in the Alligator river. He removed the hair from the head so as to make it bald, and taking his own hair and whiskers, put them in the decomposing flesh of the corpse. He knocked out two of the front teeth of the dead man, and removing the clothing from the corpse, dressed it in the clothes he had worn on the day of his disappearance. At night he conveyed the body to the place where he was supposed to have been drowned. It was one of the most desolate, barren wastes in the lowlands of eastern North Carolina, seven miles from any habitation.

The news of his return created much excitement, and talk of lynching and tar and feathering were freely indulged in.

Prince Eitel Fritz.

Among the stories of the German emperor's domestic life, is one about his second son, Prince Eitel Fritz. The emperor is exceedingly strict about his son's behavior at the table. The other day little Prince Eitel Fritz, using his fingers instead of his knife and fork, was corrected by his father several times to no purpose. At last the emperor's patience was exhausted, and he said: "Children who eat with their fingers are like little dogs that hold their food with their paws. If you use your fingers again you must go under the table the proper place for little dogs." The little prince did his best not to forget this time, and used his knife and fork like a man; but all at once he forgot again and began using his fingers. "March under the table," said his father. Prince Eitel Fritz crept under the table as bidden. After a little while the Emperor, thinking the prince very quiet, lifted up the tablecloth and peeped underneath. There sat little Prince Eitel Fritz undressed. His father asked him what he meant by undressing himself. The child answered: "Little dogs don't wear clothes; they only have skin."
