The enumerators expect some difficulty with ignorant people in obtaining the desired information, but do not think that any well informed person, who is acquainted with the reasons for asking the questions, and the advantages to be derived from the large amount of statistical information to be acquired, will refuse to answer the questions. The law is very explicit about the duties of citizens when they are approached for information. It declares that in case of any refusal to give the not in case of any tensar of give the citizen shall e subject to a fine of $30. Whatever may be the enumerator's opinion of the questions on the schedule, it is the questions on the schedule, it is hoped that no one will refuse to an-swer them, because the law will cer-tainly be invoked in every case of re-fusal, and so far as can be learned, citizens can have no possible redress

If the house is owned by head or member of family and mortgaged, what is postoffice address of owner?

Some of these questions are impossible of direct and correct answers. Men die every day in ignorance of the nature of the disease which is sapping their strength. They know they are not well, but do not know what ails them. Physicians differ in opinion as the control of the disease which is sapping their strength. They know they are not well, but do not know what ails them. Physicians differ in opinion as the control of the control guess. It seems silly, therefore, for the census men to ask questions which in many cases cannot be truthfully answered. The question whether a per-son is defective in mind, sight, hearing or speech is, to an extent, a matter of comparison. Most persons at about 40 begin to use glasses. Are they to be put down as defective in sight?

A little later in life the unpleasant discovery is often made that the cars are not so acute as they once were. Are such defective in hearing? Very few persons are willing to admit that they are defective in mind. It sometimes takes a commis-sion composed of learned men to decoast, when thoroughly perfected.
