Western Branch, Box 27, FORTLAND, OR. stopped and reversed continually, while in the electric locomotive we have the simple rotary motion, which is all we need and which makes it possible accordingly to run at a much higher rate of speed. Although the steam locomotive has been very much improved, yet it can hardly compare with the economy of stationary engines, placed where they can have an abundant water supply for condensing purposes; we can, therefore, by employing stationary engines and electric roads, do away with a great deal of unnecessary weight, and the moving parts being weight, and the moving parts being the stationary and the moving parts being the stationary engines and electric roads, do away with a great deal of unnecessary weight, and the moving parts being the stationary lives will find a sectionary lives will find a stationary nigher speed, say a hundred miles an "This would be a grand step for-

I really think that if we could come back after another hundred years, this would be the speed of come back after another hundred years, this would be the speed of traveling; it simply depends upon finding the method of the speed of traveling; it simply depends upon red, on the side. Take no other. finding the necessary method of ap-plying sufficient power, and building the locomotives to suit, arrangements being adopted to keep the cars on the track."

Commenting on these predictions, the Etectrical World remarks: "It is pleasant to find one so competent discuss engineering problems speaking so confidently of the near ap-proach of electrical express trains There are still some faint hearts in the ranks, still some over zealous en-thusiasts who would storm the works thusiasts who wound storm by a that can only be taken by a but the forces regular siege; but the forces are being marshaled, the gans trained, the parallels daily worked nearer, and one line of defenses after another must surely fall. Think a moment, and see what 100 miles hour really means. Starting at New York, it means Philadelphia for a jaunt before breakfast, Boston pleasant morning's trip, Chicago an easy night's run. And this is only one of the brilliant probabilities that is brought to our notice."
