Judge J. F. Caples, of Portland, arrived in this city last evening, from Oysterville. He is of the opinion that no change of venue will be granted in the case of the alleged murderers of the Fredicksons. Were it granted and the trial to be had in another county, it would be likely to predjudice people against the accused, for it would naturally be supposed that the inhabitants in the locality where the crime was committed would not be embittered against the murderers without good cause. For this reason Judge Caples did not believe that a the crime was committed would not be embittered against the murderers without good cause. For this reason Judge Caples did not believe that a change of venue would be granted, or even that it would be beneficial for the parties concerned. A true bill has been found against them, and it is likely that the trial of one of the accused will be proceeded with in case a jury can be selected. This will prove something of a test case, and will show whether it is essential for the ends of justice that a change of venue be granted.
