OPEN FOR THE SEASON,

day morning. The man who spoke had rushed into the office out of breath and full of excitement. In an astonishing brief time the manager of the tugbouts was made to understand that the man before him was from Oregon and had intended to be a passenger on the steamer Columbia, which had sailed at 10 o'clock that morning for northern ports. He had, owever, missed the boat, and in the missing lost his baggage, which had sailed without him. In this dilemma he applied at the tugbout office to charter a tug and try to overtake the It is a standing rate that boats on watch must be ready at a moment's

"Let go!" came the command. The beil clanged, the whistle oted, the crowd on the dock yelled and the Reliance cut through the water at the rate of eleven knots an hour. Captain Scott remembered that the steamer Columbia had passed dock on her way out to sea just five minutes before the tug started. He was pitted tug started. He was pitted against big chances, for the Columbia tug is a speedy vessel, presumably capable Groceries and Provisions, of making over twelve knots. Still the captain bent to the task with might and main. The propeller revolved with lightning speed. Navigators of sailing craft on the bay in the neigh-
