The Secret of Success.

Among the fallacies that the people delight to entertain is the idea that success can be achieved in a sudden and miraculous manner. Thousands of men stumble through life failing in everything they undertake, yet constantly sustained by the unreasoning hope that some fortuitous circumstance will arise whereby they can quickly realize a fortune. There is nothing occult about either success or failure, yet it is frequently almost impossible to define the one or account for the other. The requirements of the world are so manifold and diversified that even the most meager attainments can be most profitably employed. Success as a rule follows the man who contrives to get his abilities to the best market. A thorough knowledge of Greek poetry may be a very nice accomplishment, but it will count for nothing in a business office, a shoe factory or a tan yard. We have no desire to dispute the proposition "knowledge is power," but nevertheless, like other forces, it is so often grossly misapplied as to be almost entirely wasted in the transmission. Our educational system is to a considerable extent responsible for equipping men with ornamental, instead of practical information. The past can never be robbed of its glories; they are enshrined in song and story, but the modern achievements of the present are grander and vaster. "I have no expectation," says Emerson "that any man will read history aright who thinks that what was done in a remote age by men whose names have resounded far, has any deeper sense than what he is doing to-day."

This is an intensely practical age in which success, as a rule, only waits upon those who invite it by conscientious and consecutive endeavor. Idealism has been banished from commerce as well as art. The whole superstructure of business rests upon facts. A knowledge of these facts, and their relationship to each other, is essential to the proper direction of any enterprise. The average measure of individual capacity is higher than it was, so that what years ago was called greatness is now considered quite ordinary ability. A recent writer very truthfully observes that "the sure way to succeed is to deserve success; not to deserve it poetically or charitably, but practically by the measure of business requirements. Taking every present opportunity for well-directed hard work will surely open future opportunities for better work."

A good many people fall into the error of considering that success can be won by industry alone. Some of the most industrious men fail from lack of intelligent direction. The day is past when mere labor will suffice. Modern machinery and methods have taken the strain off the muscles and placed it on nerves and brain. The power of controlling the mind and nerve forces so as to give instant decisions on matters as they arise, and as instantly dismissing them, is always a prominent attribute of the successful manager of men and things. The erratic genius who can only work under the stimulus of unusual excitement, is sure to be distanced in the race by the man who has acquired, through discipline, a smoothness and continuity of effort.—Shoe and Leather Review.

One of the cutest advertising dodges recently invented is that of a Sixth avenue dry goods concern, who erected a scaffolding extending from the roof of the building, and has a man dressed in the United States infantry costume walking up and down all through the shopping hours. He presents arms at each end of his walk, and goes through the evolutions of a sentry. There is no sign or anything to indicate what his business is, but it attracts the attention of hundreds to the store.—American Grocer.

The Nizam of Hyderabad, recently purchased at Madras a diamond for 165,000 rupees. He will wear it as an ornament in his crown.

Merit Wins.

We desire to say to our citizens that for years we have been selling Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, Dr. King's New Life Pills, Bucklen's Arnica Salve and Electric Bitters, and have never handled remedies that sell as well, or that have given such universal satisfaction. We do not hesitate to guarantee them every time, and we stand ready to refund the purchase price, if satisfactory results do not follow their use. These remedies have won their great popularity purely on their merits. J. W. CONN, Druggist.

The beer exported from England to India for the use of the troops is complained of on acount of its acidity and intoxicating power, whilst that purchased locally is said to be "good, sound, light and of a non-intoxicating quality."

SSS
Skin Eruption Cured.

One of my customers, a highly respected and influential citizen, but who is now absent from the city, has used Swift's Specific with excellent result. He says it cured him of a skin eruption that he had been tormented with for thirty years, and had resisted the curative qualities of many other medicines.
