When a person wishes to sereen a fault, say a writer in Woman's Work, it is astonishing what absurdities are resorted to in the attempt. Men who become intoxicated furnish some very forcible illustrations of th's, as will be seen by the following an-swers to the question:

"Why do you drink?"
"Well, it is because a certain man, who professes to be a Christian, owes me but will not pay," said a man who seemed convinced in his own mind that such a course gave him full satis-

"When my old woman jumps on me about anything, I go and get as drunk as a biled owl, just to show her who is boss," was the statement of a weazenfaced man with one eye and a broken

"For the exhibaration there is in it The happiest times of my life are due to this seeming fault." But the swol-len and bloodshot eyes and blooming nose did not tend to corroborate his

"I ran for office (hie), and got left (hie). Don't yer know (hie)?" said a defeated candidate in a resigned but injured manner. "For the reason that I'm only paid $1.50 a day for my work when I should have $2.50," was the lament of one who works three and drinks the other four days of each week. "My mother-in-law won't give me a minute's rest; she's fully up to the standard of the proverbial mother-inlaw, she is." This man had a cowed appearance, a sore ear, a dislocated jaw, and a bald spot on his head. He dodged every time any one made a move, which suggested the probability of rolling pins, flat irons, etc., having been thrown more effectively than af-fectionately. "Just because my girl has gone back on me, and leans on some other fellow," stammered a love-sick youth, with a tremor in his voice "I'm out of work, and have but lit-tle money to live on," said a married man, who did not seem to realize that he was foolishly, wiekedly spend-ing the little he already had.

"Wal, yer see, boss, I'se got the rheumatiz, an' dis hyar honey from de roses am de only thing dat does me any good; it jes makes me feel lubly," was the explanation of an old darkey.
"To keep up the reputation of the craft, and be popular with the boys,"
said a printer, with ink smeared over his face, and the appearance of having "pi" in his pockets and a yearning for money within his breast.

"Well, I will acknowledge that have no excuse to offer, except that I am such a weak-minded, easily-influenced 'chump,' that never knows when to say "no," and refuse an invitation to drink. There's no excuse for it." This was the most thoroughy unselfish answer given, and the speaker the on-ly one who did not seek to hide his weakness behind the screen of some preposterous and fanciful cause.
