English Words That are Mis-Pronounced.

There are in our English at the least 3,000 or 4,000 words that are frequently mispronounced. Some of these are as follows:

Ab-a-tis. Not a-ba-tis. That has been done for this word that should be done as soon as possible for all foreign words that we use. It has been men availed themselves of chance, and their investigations large numbers of melassic.

ventory, matrimony, dedicatory, de-rogatory, natatory, category, parsi-mony, piscatory, prefatory, territory, etc., is or should be pronounced like short u; that is like a in major, actor, factor, etc. Is this type? The result factor, etc. Is this true? The penultimate o of these words falls, without an exception, under a rhythmical ac cent, which naturally does and should bring out, in no small degree, the quality of the vowel, though not in the same degree that it is brought out when standing under a preliminary accent. It is safe to assert that it is only those specially schooled to also that to slur this o that pronounce it ac-There are many that pronounce matrimony and a few that pronounce in-ventory with the o very short, or ob-scare as Worcester has it; but there are probably none, in this country, at least, that are consistent, and uniform

All our dictionaries pronounce the ou of this word ou, while nearly the whole English-speaking world, so far as the writer's observation goes, pronounces it like long oo. Many persons thus pronounce it, knowing that the authorities are against them. Squalor is another word treated in like manner. A-koursties is certainly not pleasing to the ear.

Act-or. Not the o of nor, but the o of major. A-cu-men. Not ak-u-men. Ad-ap-ta-tion.

Address. Both noun and verb are now commonly accented on the second Adduce. When, in the same sylla-ble, long u is preceded by one of the consonants d, t, l, n, s or th, it is not easy to introduce the sound of y; hence careless speakers omit it, pronouncing duty, dooty; tune, toon; lute, loot; nuisance, noosance, etc. And yet to make the u in these words as clear and perfect as in mute, cute, etc., is over nice and consequently smacks of pedantry. The two extremes should be avoided with equal care,

Any number of vessels of largest size can now come in abreast, and the bar has virtually ceased to exist. By the time the jetty has been carried out one mile further, according to the plans of the engineers, and stone in sufficient quantities dumped in to form a wall along the whole length of the jetty visible at low water, undoubtedly the channel will be scoured still more, and over thirty feet of water may be expected at low tide and forty feet at high tide. The results so far simply exceed all expectations, and give assurance that when the work shall have been completed according to the plan, the crop is a total failure.
