Senator Washburn in conversation stated that he was much surprised at the size of Astoria. He had heard considerable about the city and had looked for a much smaller place. The site of the city pleased him greatly and he could not understand after seeing the place why it was not further advanced than it is. The statesman manifested much interest in what he saw and asked many ques-tions in regard to the resources of the surrounding section. situated almost directly opposite the Seaside cannery in Uniontown, was the scene yesterday morning of a sen
Mrs. Michell to begin action for sational murder, Charles Michell, an elderly man, and an old resident of this city, killing one Wm. Johnson, trayal of Michell's 13-year-old daughter Nellie.

The circumstances leading up to this murder date back several weeks, at which time the girl disappeared and was not heard of until a few days ago, when she was discovered living with a private family near Portland, under an assumed name. Her father visited her at her new home, and from her, it is claimed, learned that she had been assaulted, and fearing the conse-quences, had fled from home.

She gave the name of her betrayer as Wm. Johnson, who resided in the house where the tragedy occurred.
The place is kept by a Mrs. Vincent, who conducts a boarding and lodging house and for a long time prior to the homicide the girl in the case had lived, doing duty as a domestic. When Michell heard the story of his dangle. Michell heard the story of his daughter he avowed vengeance, and de-clared to several persons in Portland that he would kill Johnson. The opinion as regards justification was about evenly divided, persons who claimed to know the murdered man unhesitatingly saying that he deserved his fate. Other stories were rife as to the conduct of the girl in the case, but these could not be verified. Of the murdered man Mrs. Vincent spoke highly, saying he was a quiet, industrious fellow, and attended strictly to his own business. He was about 32 years of age, of medium build, and wore a light mustache. So far as is known he had no tache. So far as is known he had no relatives in this section. He worked formerly at Utzinger's and also at Kopp's brewery. Michell, as has been stated, was well
