

The Daily Astorian. ASTORIA, OREGON: THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 12, 1909. TIME FOR ACTIVITY.

TACOMA now proposes to do what Astoria has long been talking about, but was too terrible slow to accomplish, and that is, to establish a steamer line to secure the trade of Gray's Harbor and the Shoalwater bay cities.

Now if Astoria would put on a steamer they could have the trade better than Tacoma or Portland, being so much nearer than either of those cities and could thus furnish the towns on those two bodies of water with needed supplies so much quicker than could those cities, and as the steamer from here would make so many more trips in a month, the profit would be much greater.

We have several large general stores, either one of which could well afford the experiment of chartering a steamer for three or four months to run between this city and the towns on Shoalwater bay and Gray's harbor, and build up a trade.

TUESDAY'S deliberations in Portland of the two committees appointed by the State Board of Commerce and the Oregon Press Association took place in separate meetings and afterwards they met in joint session.

WEDNESDAY'S deliberations in Portland of the two committees appointed by the State Board of Commerce and the Oregon Press Association took place in separate meetings and afterwards they met in joint session.

WHOLESALE loss of life is reported by telegraph at the wreck of a British man-of-war off the Spanish coast on Monday night, when 247 human beings out of the ship's officers and men, or all but three of those on board, were swept into the sea and drowned, or dashed to pieces on the rocks while a heavy sea was raging.

Over the wires from New York comes a well authenticated report that Jay Gould has obtained control of the Union Pacific railroad.

THIS IS TO NOTIFY ALL WHOM IT MAY CONCERN that I will not be responsible for any debts contracted by my wife, Sophia Schuring after this date.
