Messrs, Willard and McDonald have been hunting in the place where the sand came from and have traced it to a ledge of gold quartz averaging twenty feet thick and it can be traced two miles and at least two mills are already located. Out of twenty-four samples twenty showed gold. The ledge is near the Horseshoe bend, about sixteen miles from Genoa, and the river cuts it in two places. It is regarded as one of the most important mineral dis-coveries made in this section for cars. The Genoa Courier of yesterday corroborates the news of the strike. It gives a column account and says that over three miles of the ledge is now located.
