Another great vessel, historical by on of its size, is one built by Hiero, King of Syracuse. Her dimen-sions are estimated to be large from one successful voyage. A full description of her would read somewhat like that of one of our Long Island, sound or Hudson river steamboats. She had three entrances, the lowest leating to the hold, the second to the eating rooms and third appropriated to the soldiers. There were thirty rooms, each having four couches, for the soldiers; there were fifteen couches in the sailors' supper room, and there were three more cabins, each having the couches. The floors of all these rooms were laid in stone mosaic work. There was also a temple of cypress in laid with ivory and dedicated to Venus. The mainmast was composed of a single tree, and the vessel carried four wooden and eight iron anchors. This is how the late John Ruszits, the millionaire fur dealer, got married. While abroad on a business trip he visited a friend in Sweden. While in this friend's house he heard some one in the next room playing on a piano. The pianist was a young lady from Bremen, who was visiting there. Turning to his friend, Mr. Ruszits said: "If I should ever marry I would like to marry a woman like that." The gentleman went to the door and called the young lady in. "What do you think Mr. Ruszits just said?" he inquired. Of course the lady did'nt know. Mr. Raszits struck in and said "Well, I'm not afraid to repeat it," and he proceeded to do so. Confederate Killed by a Pair of Yankee S. C. Bowen, of Nashville, Tenn., says: The true story of the death of General Ewell is known only to a few. As a young man he was quite a dandy, and continued to pay a great deal of attention to his dress until August, 1862, when he lost a leg at the battle of Groveton. He recovered in a few months and led his troops until the close of the war, but with lose all interest in his personal appearance, and after he went back to his farm in Tennessee was in the habit of wearing the most dreadful old garments imaginable, saying that it made no difference how a one-legged man looked. A year or two afsale of quartermaster's stores, and General Ewell bought a quantity of military trousers for which there was no longer any use.

He issued them to his workmen. and at last took up the habit of wear-ing a pair about his farm. They were shoddy goods, very thin and flimsy, and on a damp day in the winter Ewell took a cold, which developed into pneumonia, and from which he his death, when he knew there was no hope, he said to a friend: "The enemy has killed me at last.
