Many Mummies At The Fair

More than a hundred South American mummies, carefully wrapped in straw and sewed up in heavy canvas bags, are now stored in warehouse 'A' at the world's fair grounds.

George A. Dorsey, a young man recently graduated from Harvard university, unearthed all the mummies now at Jackson park.

"The first to do in hunting mummies is to get in a section of the country where they abound. Any of the natives can tell you that, although it is scarcely necessary to consult them, for the old town of Ancon is known to be the best field.

"The natives of that country bury their dead in a peculiar manner," Mr. Dorsey continued, "The hands of the dead person were spread over the face and the arms pressed against the chest. Then the knees were drawn up until they almost touched the elbows. The body was then prepared for burial. Usually it was wrapped in a peculiar cloth made of fiber, with leaves or other vegetable growth stuffed in to make a compact package.

"Occasionally we found gold images and the implements used by the natives. Ancon, where all our excavations were made, was a fishing town, and hundreds of fish bones were found with the dead. We secured many of these. The graves of women are the most interesting. Generally they contain the work basket used by the woman in life. This was formed of woven fiber, and, like the bodies, is well preserved. The clothes in which mummies are wrapped are also thoroughly preserved.

There are in the city quite a number of smokers who imagine they are connoisseurs in all matters pertaining to smoking outfits. Quite a number of these gentlemen have very creditable collections of pipes and cigar holders, of all sorts and sizes, and from almost every country in the world.

"I felt sorry for the poor devil so I told him if he put it in the pawnshop it would surely be lost, as if he could not redeem it the broker would confiscate it at the end of thirty days. I agreed to load him $7 with the understanding that if he did not redeem it in three months it was to be mine. He told me, and I do not doubt his word, as he had such an honest look, that the date the pipe bore, 1812, is the correct date when his grandfather got the pipe in the old country from a friend who was working in the factory where it was made, and that it had been in the family ever since.

"The pipe which the gentleman referred to was shown to his friend, and was a large meerschaum, of what purported to be a meerschaum pipe. The bowl, which is heavily carved, is colored as though it had been smoked for scores of years, and is about 4 1/2 inches deep and about 1 1/2 inches in diameter. It has a long cherry-wood stem and is heavily mounted in what is supposed to be sterling silver, but the application of a file soon shows that it is brass. A meerschaum test will show that the bowl is nothing more than fire clay. It is estimated that within the past three months over 100 of these pipes have been disposed of in Seattle and Tacoma.

"The gentlemen who own these pipes occupy almost every position in social and business life. Senators, state and county officials, doctors and lawyers and even gentlemen of the cloth, point with pride to the 'pipe with a history.' At a rough estimate the pipes are worth about $1.50 each, as they can be bought wholesale in New York City for $1 a dozen. Taking $7 as an average price obtained, it would leave the old Dutch pipe seller a reasonable profit on both his pipes and their history.—Tacoma Ledger.

The chinook which has long been expected and ardently hoped for has at last arrived, and under its influence the snow and ice are disappearing. There has been a good deal of discussion, says the Portland Telegram, as to the direction from which the chinook wind comes. Under date of yesterday "H. R." sends the following note:

"A newcomer maintains that the chinook wind comes from the northwest, while his friend, a resident of the city for some years, holds that it is from the southwest. By giving the true direction from which it comes you will confer a favor on both."

The Chinook Indians, famous for flattening the heads of their infants, lived at the mouth of the Columbia river. The warm winter wind that came from the sea to melt the snow was for a long time supposed to originate off the mouth of the Columbia; hence the wind was named after these Indians. Old Oregonians say that there is no Chinook wind, except that which blows from the mouth of the river; but the same general influence, taking its beginning from the Japan current, spreads itself all over the Pacific Northwest, including British Columbia, and even warms the frozen plains of Montana.

Mrs. J. W. Conn left on the Queen this morning for San Francisco to visit her daughter, Mrs. A. F. Johns, who has just returned from the East. She will be absent about two months.

The fancy for parting the hair, which for a time was entirely discarded, has been struggling to the front again, which remark is not intended to be funny, only actual. It has not got to the front, however, for most women who take to the part let it end at but not come through the short fringe, which is just over the forehead, thus producing a softening effect.
