A girl has been arrested in Chicago and fined $20 for hugging and kissing men on the streets. She pleaded in court that she had a desire for that sort of thing that she could not control, and when she saw a man whose appearance pleased her she just threw her arms about him and kissed him as many times as she could before he could escape. It is likely this young lady, if she is good looking, would find Astoria in every way a pleasanter place for residence than Chicago, the home of "bulls' and bears,"

People living along the nine miles of beach at the Seaside are complaining bitterly of the passage by the last legislature of the bill offering a bounty of 13 for each sea-lion killed. It is said that men who object to any of the usual forms of work have threatened to camp on the beach near the scal rocks, and shoot the sea-lions thereon. Some have already been killed, and even in the present cool weather the stench arising from the carcasses along the beach is something disgusting. Owners of property in that section justly complain that if the sea-lious are destroyed, one of the greatest attrac-

The case of Andrew Simonson, who was arrested on complaint of John Smiseth on Friday, was dismissed by Judge Osburn in the police court yesterday. The defendant took the pistol away from Smiseth, and in turn had the weapon torn from his hand and thrown overboard by a man unknown to him. When the complainant and defendant met afterward, Simonson explained that his action was due to a desire to prevent trouble, seeing that a crowd of excited men were on hand; and the case was therefore settled by the de-

As driven piles are principally used for foundations along the water front in Astoria, the following account of an experiment lately made in San Francisco, is of interest. The mud all along the front of San Francisco is deeper and softer than here and piles have to be driven to greater depth to give them the required load-sustaining capacity: A pile ninety-two feet long, sixteen inches in diameter at the large end and to take the whole three hundred or eight inches at the small end, was driven at the old approach to the ferry slip. The top of the pile was three feet below the city base and the end ninty-five feet below the same, and seventy-three feet in the mud. On this pile a platform twelve feet long was built and loaded with 90,000 pounds of pig iron. Comparative levels were taken and the iron was allowed to remain there for 24 hours. Notwithstanding the severe test a close examination showed the engineers that the pile had not such a feature of the severe test a close examination for the severe severe test a close examination for the severe severe test a close examination for the severe severe severe test a close examination for the severe sev not sunk a fraction of an inch. The fishermen's strike is at an end, and tonight the river and harbor will be dotted with white-winged boats from one end to the other. Although every possible obstacle was placed in the way to preyent an amicable adjustment of difficulties between cannerymen and fishermen, the wiser heads on the shoulders of the more industrious of the fishermen carried the day, and after a protracted meeting of the fishermen, it was decided that 5 cents per fish was a fair price, and that that should be the ruling rate for the season of 1893. The pirates did not like to give in, of course, for the reason that their chances for money making would be destroyed by an agreement such as was proposed; and every argument was made and every inducement offered to bring about a refusal of the cannery men's offer. Many of these parties had scows and plungers ready to begin operations should the cannery men come to terms on the $1.15 per fish proposition, their plan being to purchase all the larger fish at that price, or even a little more, and then sell them to the cannery men by the pound. In this way, as much as $3 would occasionally be received for a single salmon, while $2 would be frequently obtained, many of the big fish weighing easily forty pounds, while not a few reach sixty pounds and even higher in rare instances. The smaller higher in rare instances. The smaller fish, of course, would be kept for the canners, who would thus be compelled out-hand furniture. Highest cash price paid. canners, who would thus be compelled to pay an average price of over 6 cents per pound. This practice had been resorted to by those parties so frequently in former years, that this year the packers were determined to get a square deal, no matter at what cost, and the better class of the union fishermen agreed with them and did not hes- $ 5.00 Coffins Reduced to... itate to state that the cannery men had been robbed in previous years.

During the day the agitators among the fishermen, many of them men who had been in the country for a few months only, formed in procession and paraded the principal streets from Uniontown to Uppertown, led by a brass band, and with banners, on each of which, executed with charcoal, was the picture of a salmon, with the words and figures underneath, "Price, $1.15." Many of those in the procession were not fishermen, even, but men who were interested in the piracy business, and not a few of them were not admitted to the meeting of the union men in Liberty Hall.

There were but two cases reported yesterday in which fish were destroyed by the strikers. One was in the Elmore cannery and the other occurred near Fort Stevens, where a fisherman was chased by some of the strikers and compelled to throw some eight fish overboard. At the Elmore cannery the trouble was more serious, but was settled as soon as the strikers had accomplished their object in destroying fendant paying the costs and the valup from the American Star Packing cannery. Here some three hundred men had congregated, and as the schooner effected a landing, approached. They were excited, and while some proposed to go aboard the schooner, throw a sack over the head of the captain. and thus hide their identity, while the fish were being thrown overboard, others urged that it would be as well to walt until the fish were landed on the dock. A few of the crowd objected to the destruction of the property, but they were talked down. Some of the men then approached the salmor, twenty-five in all, and proceeded to throw them overboard. Upon seeing this, Mr. Ridehalgh interfered, but he was quickly buffeted around and in a minute was huddled across the netracks. The fish, meanwhile, were thrown into the river without the perpetrators of the outrage being identifled. No attempt was made by the mob to inflict bodily harm upon Mr. Ridehalgh, or Pete Shusted, Mr. Elmore's foreman, who was also on the dock at the time. While the crowd was on the netracks, it seemed as if the frail structure would collapse, and dump its load of human freight into the swiftly running waters beneath.

None of the fishermen who are engaged to fish for the Elmore cannery were among the mob, and the perpetrators of the outrage were what are known among union men as "seabs." Later in the afternoon Sheriff Smith came down with warrants for the arrests of five ring-leaders, but these gentlemen remained out of sight, while one of the men assured the official that if one was arrested he would have
