The officers of the Columbine, which arrived in from San Francisco yesterday morning, were surprised to read the following in yesterday's Oregonian, which seemed a little previous, as they had supposed they were at sea at the time they were reported as "anchored in midstream." In Portland: "The new lighthouse tender Columbine, which will hereafter perform duty in this district, is now anchored in midstream. She left Astoria yesterday afternoon at 3 o'clock, and made a comparatively quick trip up, arriving in port at about 11:30 p. m. As some repairs will have to be made, it is not certain when visitors will be permitted to board her."

There was a stir in the precincts of Chinatown Sunday, and for an hour or two the excitement was intense around the store of Ark Wo on Second street. Suddenly a Chinese darted out of the store and off up the street at a rapid rate, holding in his hand a little slip of yellow paper in which, in a large, round and eligible hand, was written the following: "Astoria, April 15, 1893—Chinatown Smallpox News—Chinatown Ark Wo pawnshop up stairs second street have a one Chinaman smallpox now." The Chinaman continued his run up street until he saw Dr. Walker, who was thus accosted: "You Doctor Walker, heat officer," the above note being handed him. The health officer read it and at once proceeded to the place in question, where he found the alleged small-pox patient suffering from eczema.

Yesterday's Oregonian has the following paragraph: "It is again asserted with positiveness that work will at once be resumed on the Portland and Astoria railroad, and the line be completed as speedily as possible. The vicissitudes of this enterprise resemble very much those encountered by the Oregon Pacific, and the fact that the latter has now more than a hundred miles of road in successful operation should give the friends of the Astoria enterprise much encouragement. This line is needed for the development of the northwestern corner of the state, and to render Astoria's shipping facilities more available. Pay It, Dear, Or I'll Go to Jail.

M. G. Barker, a Portland contractor, was arrested Sunday in this city, by Sheriff Smith upon a warrant telegraphed from the metropolis. Barker was an absconding debtor, and the warrant for his arrest was the result of a suit brought by the Dunlavy Lumbering Company, to recover some $200 or thereabouts, for building material. The means by which the absconder sought to defraud his creditors were as follows: Barker conceived the idea some months ago, of building a house on that worthless, but often-tendered substitute for gold coin known as "jaw-bone," and in furtherance of his scheme ran in debt for all the necessary material. The Dunlavy Lumber Company was the largest creditor, but the managers of that institution thought themselves secure. The house was finished last week, and immediately a deed was executed by Barker conveying the building absolutely to his wife. She in turn sold it. But in the interim between the conveyance to her and the sale, Barker left for this city en route to San Francisco, and arrived on the Telephone on Saturday, the understanding between the two being that she should leave on the Oregon and both should leave for the Golden state from this city. The lumber company, however, was apprised of the fact that the house had been sold, and on Saturday brought suit and the warrant telegraphed as above stated.

Very soon after Sheriff Smith received the warrant, his hand was on Mr. Barker's shoulder, while the words, "I want you," at once sent that gentleman's hopes of escape down to zero. The sheriff was requested by Mr. Barker to go with him to the Oregon, where he was introduced to the lady. The sheriff considerably waited for Barker to explain the object of his visit, but was finally obliged to announce his errand himself. The woman then asked her husband what they had better do. He replied, "Pay it, dear, or I'll have to go to jail." The husband then requested the sheriff to allow them to speak privately, and the officer withdrew for a minute. When he was recalled again, the woman asked if there were any other bills. She was informed that the sheriff knew of no other suits and that he had but one warrant. "Well, warrant or no warrant," she said, "not another cent I'll pay," as she counted out thirty coins, each of the denomination of 50 cents.

When the Oregon was about to leave, the pursuer of the Lurline endeavored to collect a bill of $50 which he had against Barker, but that individual, who the steamer pulled out, only replied, "Arrest me if you want the money," realizing that papers in a civil suit could not be issued on Sunday.

A majority of the fishermen were out yesterday and the previous night, but report the catch as very light. There is still some dissatisfaction among those who wanted to be paid $1.15 per fish, and whether this feeling will develop into any serious trouble is as yet problematical. Groups of fishermen might have been seen near Uniontown yesterday discussing the situation, and denouncing those who accepted the cannerymen's offer of 5 cents per pound. It is alleged by the disgruntled ones that the call for Saturday's mass meeting stated that "fishermen of all classes were invited," and in consequence many who were in good standing, but had not brought their cards to show this fact, as well as all the outsiders, were confronted by a placard outside Liberty Hall, on which the announcement was made that "none but members in good standing will be admitted." In brief, the $1.15 men claim that the meeting was packed in the interest of those who wished to fish for 5 cents per pound, and that the decision of the meeting did not voice the sentiments of the majority of the members of the union. It was said today that a movement is on foot among the men fishing for the Kinney, Cutting and Elmore canneries to form a union wholly independent of the C. R. F. P. U., and that there is no prospect of a reconciliation between the factions in the latter organization.
