Paul Prior, Priest.

(Written for The Astorian.)

Shortly after graduating, I had gone into the mining region, not a particularly moral place. In fact, the miners rather prided themselves that "Hades' was the roughest camp in the Rockies. Seated in my office one evening, I was surprised to see a large number of miners pass my window, evidently going out of town, leaving the saloons and gambling houses practically empty. I followed, wondering what this strange movement meant. A short distance from town was a knoll, (by that strange nomenclature of the west) called Calvary. Seated about it were some two hundred miners, while in the midst stood a young man, with soft brown hair and sad brown eyes, his complexion of that beautiful brilliancy we so often see in some cases of consumpton. I was about to ask a miner who he was, but he held his hand up warningly and said, "Hush! he's going to sing." And as the notes rose clear, like the tone of a silver bell, the rough miners seemed scarcely to breathe. They were carried up beyond all sordid desires, and when he stopped I heard them breathe like long-drawn sighs. And then he preached; yet it was not a sermon, but a yearning cry for love. He spoke of the miners' love, which led him to forsake society or friends, to wrest from nature it's treasures, that loved ones might live. He spoke of mother's love, self-sacrificing to the very end, and then the love of God and love personified in Christ, and read them "The Sermon on the Mount," that grand hymn of love, with such true interpretation that it came to me as a revelation, and rough men wept. And then he sang again a hymn of faith triumphant over flesh. He stopped, and from his lips there poured a crimson stream as he sank half fainting to the ground. I rushed forward to his assistance, and rough men bore him tenderly to a little shanty built amid some apple trees, where they said he lived a hermit's life,

The little room into which he was carried, though rough, bore the unmistakable air of refinement. In a niche in the farther wall was a little wooden cross, while a shelf well-filed with books, betokened the scholar, I was wondering whom I could get to nurse him, when Buck Lee, the one time terror of the camp, said: "Let me nuss him, Doc! He's the best friend I've got, and Old Buck stays with a friend." I gladly acquiesced. From Buck I learned the history of the man since he had come to camp. His arrival had caused great excitement. A meeting was held to warn him to The lewest price of these novels in leave town. He met them with such any other way, would be 10 cents each, or 31 for the ten books, which The Astorian subscribers can have for 30 cents.

Every ten weeks a new set of ten books will be offered on the same terms. Thus, in the course of the year, you will have a valuable library of 50 cooks that will cost you can be supposed and courtesy that they were disarmed and returned baffled. The smallpox and pilled. The smallpox bad broken out, and old Smith, the physician, whom I had just succeeded, though chronically drunk, drank now worse than ever. Mr. Prior, for such though chronically drunk, drank now worse than ever. Mr. Prior, for such the young priest's name, had discovery of a medical cure rendering an operation with the knife unnecessary hereafter. This remedy has never been known to fail. The young himself into the work, and thrown himself into the work, and the young priest's name, had discovery of a medical cure rendering an operation with the knife unnecessary hereafter. This remedy has never been known to fail. The proposed the proof of the poor minday and night he nursed the poor min-ers, Buck being of the number, and through his untiring energy the small-pox was conquered. Not only was the pox was conquered. Not only was the small-through his untiring energy the small-pox was conquered. Not only was the small-pox was conquered, but he had made. smallpox conquered, but he had made a friend of every man. Frail of form, he made difficult journeys over the mountains, to distant hamlets, and had just returned from one of these expelitions.

> A few week's later, as he sat by his pen window inhaling the odor of the apple blossoms, he said: "Doctor, you tnow I have not long to live; there is a packet I wish you would send to a 'riend:" and then he bent his head and moved his lips in prayer, "Oh God, f I might live to serve you longer here, but let Thy will be done." He then took a photograph from his pocket and gazed at it tenderly. It was a photo of a beautiful girl standing beneath an apple tree. With her slender arms she brought the blossoms closer to her, her rich, dark curis surmounted shapely head, her eyes beamed with sympathy. He passed the photo to "Your flancee?" I asked. "No," he answered, with indescribable pathos, "only a friend. She is the daughter of a distant relative. I loved her as a child, and when my mother died, her mother, who is one of the grandest women I have ever known, was a second mother to me. My father died of consumption, as my mother did. After his death I went to live with an uncle who was a clergyman. I studied for the church, and was curate in a poor parish in Chicago. There I met Ruth Hamilton again. Her mind, among the poor, whom Christ loved, and a chance to make a home if the parish succeeded. I tolled day and night, succeeded beyond my expectations, and my cup of bliss was full. The Bishop was to induct me into the handsome church we had built. Shortly before the time I was seized with a severe hemorrhage, and I realized that I was doomed when everything looked brightest. My parents, both of consumptive stock, had married, and I suffered for their crime. I went to say good-bye to all I loved on earth. They had a beautiful country place and she looked so pretty there among the apple mountains with renewed health." "I felt a great lump in my throat, for I knew that I must die. That was just a year ago; the apple trees are again in bloom, and may their blossoms fall upon my grave. I came out here and upon my grave. I came out here and connell, defendants. felt a great lump in my throat, for I tried to serve my Master with such vigor as would make up for past short-comings."

They buried him under the apple trees. There was scarcely a dry eye among the miners as they rememberd his self-sacrifice for them, and their sentiments were voiced by Buck Lee when he said. "He was the best there of this summons, which will be the nineteenth day of June. 1893, and if you fail to appear or answer, for want thereof plaintiff will take judgment against you for the sum of six hundred and ninty-eight dollars, with interest thereon from the 15th day of August 1891, at the rate of 15th day of August 1891, at the rate of 15th day of August 1891, at the rate of 15th day of August 1891, at the rate of 15th day of June.
