Astoria's Wheet and Flour Fleet.

The actual wheat year is drawing to a close. Herewith is printed an interesting statement regarding the foreign trade of Astoria in the current wheat year. It gives the name of each ship or bark that has sailed hence for European ports since September 1, 1892, with the quantity of wheat or flour which she carried. The first date given tells when the vessel sailed; the second, when she arrived out. All the vessels named are British with the exception of four American—the George Curtis, the Kenilworth, the Challenger and the St. James; one Norwegian, the Nordlyset; one French, the Duchesse Anne; two Danish, the Prins Valdemar and Denmark; and one German, the Germania.

The wheat shipments make a total of 2,871,198 bushels. The flour exports were 16 in number, amounting in all to 303,754 barrels. The salmon shipments, by sea, were 54,843 cases. Of course, these shipments do not include the wheat, salmon and other products that are sent hence by steamer to San Francisco, Portland and elsewhere, on their way to home and foreign markets. Twenty-eight of the 62 wheat cargoes exceeding each, 50,000 centals. The largest vessel in the wheat fleet was the Mowhan, which measured 2747 tons, and carried hence the largest cargo, 91,449 centals, equal to 152,415 bushels at 60 pounds to the bushel.

There are, happily, so far, no shipwrecks to report. All the vessels that sailed prior to December 15th have reached their destination:

In the case of M. J. Kinney et als., charged with illegal fishing on the Columbia, near the opposite shore, Judge Cleveland has decided that this state holds concurrent jurisdiction.

The intention of counsel for defense, as expressed by Mr. Fulton last evening, is to surrender the defendants to the sheriff, get them out on a writ of habeas corpus, and have the case tried in the United States district court in Portland.

A question similar to the one raised in this case occurred some months since, when a fisherman was charged with stealing a net, the property of Mr. R. D. Hume. The man was in Astoria when the complaint against him was sworn out, and as the deputy sheriff from Washington had no requisition papers, his attorneys raised the point that Oregon had no jurisdiction. The defendant, however, got on board the steamer Telephone to go up the river, and the minute he put his foot on board the steamer the deputy arrested him. His case came up in the circuit court at Cathlamet, and the judge decided that the jurisdiction of Washington extended to the south shore of the Columbia.
