SOUND OPINIONS. In these days, when such wild opinions are rife, it is encouraging to read the sound, conservative remarks which President Hill of the Great Northern railway made last week in St. Paul.

The last month or six weeks has been a stormy one financially, but the country at large is prospering. The conditions of the country are more than unusually favorable.

There are indications that Mr. Cleveland is secretly urging on newspaper attacks upon the proposal to impose an income tax.

Mr. Hill has shown confidence in his predictions by building the first transcontinental railroad constructed without a government subsidy or land grant.

With all her faults, and she has a good many, Portland should be honored for her adherence to honest money and sound banking.

The thing to do now is to undo what congress has already done. A repeal of the McKinley law and the restoration of silver to its constitutional use as money is what the people are demanding.

Chairman Harry of the Democratic National Committee is out in favor of an issue of $100,000,000 in bonds by the administration.

basis. The only way for congress to remedy its tinkering is to substitute a law for the Sherman act providing for the free and unlimited coinage of both gold and silver.

Just now when democratic congressmen are preparing to eat crow, in other words to repeal the Sherman law, the Telegram would have them go deeper in the mire by establishing "free and unlimited coinage of silver."

We must hesitate to advise the democrats to nominate Henry Watterson of Kentucky for president in 1896, much as we admire him, when he writes so unsoundly as follows:

In round numbers the expenses of government ought to be within $350,000,000. One hundred and twenty-five millions of this we get in round numbers from the internal revenue tax.

Europe will await with anxiety the net result of the German elections. This can hardly be determined for some time. In due course, however, Emperor William will again ask the German parliament to sanction two years' service with an increase in the military forces.

There is nothing in the growth of the city or county to warrant the rapid increase in taxation for which we recently gave dates and figures.

Kentucky has only one republican daily newspaper, and its editor is president of the State Press Association, which shows that even the democratic editors of Kentucky know where to look for the best presidential timber.

The hoary-headed old chestnut about the capture of the southern states by the populists, which ought to have been buried forever by the returns from the Presidential election, has again been set upon its feet.

Mr. Cleveland is said to be in doubt as to the public sentiment toward Hawaii. The people have certainly spoken plainly enough through the press and the mouths of prominent men.

Secretary Morton may not know much about farming, but he appears to have seen the populists through common-sense glasses when he said of them: "I am opposed to all of their vicious vagaries."

The new comptroller of currency is in danger of being over-advertised by the Washington correspondents.
