NATURAL ENEMY OF THE SPIDER

The Ichneumon Fly of Ceylon and Its Method of Reproduction.

A writer quoted by Leisure Hour gives an interesting account of the curious habits of the ichneumon fly of Ceylon, the natural enemy of the spider.

This insect is green in color, and in form resembles a wasp, with a marginately thin waist. It makes its nest of well-worked clay, and then goes out on a hunting expedition. Its victims are invariably spiders of various kinds, but are all subject to the same mode of treatment. A scientific sting injects some poison which effectually paralyzes the luckless spider, who is then carried off to the nest and there fastened with a dab of moist clay.

Another and another victim is brought to this chamber of horrors. Then the prescient mother ichneumon fly proceeds to deposit her eggs, one in the body of each spider, which can just move its legs in a vague, aimless manner, but can offer no resistance. This done, the fly returns to her work as mason. She prepares more clay and builds up the entrance to this ghastly cell. Then she commences a new cell which she furnishes in like manner, and closes; then she adds yet another cell, and so proceeds until her store of eggs are all provided for, and her task in life being accomplished, she dies leaving her evil brood to hatch at leisure. In due time these horrid little maggots come to life and find themselves cradled in a ladder of fresh meat. Each poor spider is still alive and his juices afford nutriment for the ichneumon-grub, until it is ready to pass into its chrysalis stage, thence to emerge as a winged fly, fully prepared to carry out the traditions of its ancestors with regard to spiders, and fulfill the purpose for which they have been created, according to ichneumon belief.

NOT PROUD OF HIS ELECTION.

There is a case on record in Japan where the winner at the polls was not only sorry for his success but came through that success subsequently to wish that he had never been born. This was in the village of Awa, and the person honored—or dishonored—by the majority vote was a Jap by the name of Abi Tanihei. It seems that the village of Awa was harassed by a midnight robber whom nobody could detect. The head of the hamlet summoned the entire male population under his charge and directed every man to write the name of the person whom he suspected and to deposit the paper in a box. Fifteen ballots bore the name of Abi Tanihei, the rest being blanks. The man whom everybody distrusted was so much overcome with antipathy that he made a full confession and went to prison. In a more civilized country an incident of this sort could never happen, and it is to be hoped that it will never be tried. If Abi Tanihei had really been an honest man it would have made no difference in his fate, which would indeed have been a dreadful thing—Harper's Young People.

SHE NEVER TOOK ADVICE.

Disregarding the Young Man's Warning She Stepped Into the Slush.

He who had much occasion to be abroad on the day when the snow, rain and wind made merry with the population of this town, saw some queer sights and heard some queer things, says the New York Times. One of the worst crossings in the lower part of the city was at the intersection of Broadway and Fulton street, where the slush and snow formed an expanse of something which told nothing of the depth of the mixture. Here and there was a hummock which might furnish solid footing, but probably wouldn't. A young man essaying the crossing stopped half way between the curbs, and, deciding that the rest of the ford was impossible, turned back. As he did so he ran into an elderly woman who was close behind him.

"Beg pardon, madam," said he, "but you'd better not try it."

The lady gave her skirts an extra twitch and glared at the youth.

"I want you to know," she responded, "that I never needed a man's advice, and I don't need it now. Lemme by."

The young man jumped aside and she who would not be befriended went ahead. There was a splash, a half-smothered cry, a wild scramble and she stood on the sidewalk. But the slush had gone above the tops of her stout walking shoes. Grimly she looked back at her adviser, and the wind brought her remark to his ears:

"I never took a man's advice, but I wish I had that time," she said.

People who have taken the Lake Superior steamers at Port Arthur have noticed the high, long dike of basalt that pushes into the water from the northern limit of Thunder bay. The Indians believe that this ridge is the grave of Hiawatha, or as he is called there, Manibozho, and few redmen pass there without dropping beads or a pipeful of tobacco in the water as an obligation to his spirit.

The Bon Marche in Paris is said to employ 100 men who do nothing but watch for shop-lifters. This one establishment alone arrests on an average from twelve to fifteen thousand people annually who have been caught stealing. Probably if thirty or forty thousand more who don't get caught are added an idea can be formed of the way kleptomaniacs flourish in France.
