

The coast defense warship Monterey came steaming slowly up the channel yesterday morning and let go her anchor directly opposite the Pacific Cable Company's wharf, her old-sounding whistles returning the greeting of those of the river craft that tooted a hearty welcome. As she drew nearer, large crowds sought points of vantage from which to obtain a good view of the formidable vessel.

About 10 o'clock Mayor M. C. Crosby, Hon. C. W. Fulton, Collector Taylor and B. Van Dusen, of the reception committee paid the Monterey a visit, and extended the freedom of the city to Captain Kempff, officers and crew. All day long boats of all description circled around the vessel, but none of them were allowed to land visitors.

In the afternoon Captain J. H. D. Gray, appointed by the committee to arrange for the reception of visitors to the battleship today, W. B. Adair and an Astorian reporter, went on board and were received at the gangplank by Lieutenant A. C. Almy. Arrangements were soon made for a lighter to be placed on either side of the vessel upon which passengers will be landed from the small boats today from 10 a. m. till 5 p. m.

Through the courtesy of Lieutenant Almy, E. C. Pendleton and other officers, the party was shown through the vessel, of which a description will be found below.

Captain Kempff was at one time stationed here as light-house inspector, and knows many old Astorians whom he will be pleased to meet.

The Monterey is a twin screw, steel armored vessel of the Monitor type. She was constructed by the Union Iron Works of San Francisco, and the contract with the government called for $1,628,950. There was a stipulation in the contract that every horse power in excess of that called for by the contract, 5400 for the main engine and air circulating pumps, a premium of $100 was to be paid, a like amount to be exacted for each horse power less than the above amount.

The armor is eight inches thick, to 9 inches above the cruising water line for 19 feet immediately forward and aft of the 13 inch belt. This plate tapers to 4 inches above the shelf.

The main battery consists of two 10-inch 27-ton guns and two 12-inch 46-ton guns. These guns are mounted in two barbette turrets—the 12-inch guns forward, the 10-inch guns aft. The second battery consists of six 6-pounders mounted on the superstructure deck; two 3-pounders on the bridge, and two in the military top. The barbette armor of the forward turret is 13 inches thick and the revolving armor is 8 inches thick. The thickness of the after turret is a little less than half of the forward. The smokestack and fire room ventilator are armored to five feet above the deck by steel 6 inches thick. It has a double bottom which is divided into 107 separate water tight compartments and the ship is submerged to her fighting trim by admitting water into this double bottom. Her length including rudder is 262 feet and 4 inches, and her beam is 59 feet.

The depth of hold from the top of the main deck is 14½ feet. Displacement for seagoing, trim is 4027 tons and the displacement for fighting trim is 4350 tons. Her hull is composed of mild steel, and she was begun in 1890 and completed in 1893. The trial trip took place on January 5th, in San Francisco harbor.

It is a floating island in itself, and all ready for war, peace or any of the vicissitudes of fate which time and events may bring about. It lies so low in the water, so very low in fact, that people who saw the men-of-war which were in port last fall, will wonder at the difference. But the vessel is built like the famous Monitor, and is consequently built under the water. Down there, with the waves rolling far above their heads, is a small army of men, who eat, sleep and drink by the light of Edison's incandescent lamps. Although its hold is a big place and would take a person a full hour to go over it, yet every square inch of the space is utilized. There are winding alleyways that lead to all the numerous different compartments and stairways, which communicate with another community, a library and electric plant, a lodging house, restaurant, machine shop, clothing store, commissary department, a saloon, and anything else that you can think of that men in the enlightened nineteenth century need to make them happy. The big guns which frown out from the turrets throw a projectile weighing nearly a ton, at a velocity of 2500 feet per second for a distance of eight miles. The officers claim that there is no armor which is invulnerable against these projectiles, and in turn say that the armor of the Monterey is sufficient to resist any gun which has ever been on the Pacific coast.

The Monterey went into commission February 13, 1893, and at the present time is officered as follows: Captain, Louis Kempff; lieutenant-commander, E. C. Pendleton, executive officer; lieutenant, J. W. Carlin, navigator; lieutenant, R. F. Nicholson; lieutenant, F. H. Sherman; junior lieutenant, A. C. Almy; ensign, W. R. Shoemaker; ensign, G. H. Burrage; chief engineer, Joseph Trilley; past assistant engineer, Howard Gage; assistant engineer, E. Theiss; paymaster, W. J. Thompson; surgeon, G. F. Winslow; past assistant surgeon,

This image shows a blank, aged, cream-colored page, likely an endpaper or flyleaf of a book. The paper has a slightly textured appearance with some minor discoloration and creases, characteristic of old paper. A small, irregular tear or hole is visible near the bottom center of the page. The left edge of the page shows the binding of the book, and the overall tone is a warm, off-white or light beige.
