America's application of astronomy to the uses of daily life is curiously illustrated by Professor E. S. Holden, director of the Lick Observatory, in an instructive article in the August Forum. Our public lands, he observes, are laid out in rectangular plots; every important seaport has its noon time-ball to regulate the chronometers of ships; most railroads and towns have correct time-signals furnished by the observatories, and thousands of local times were changed into standard times over the whole of the United States in a single day without the slightest accident or detention on more than one hundred thousand miles of railway. He makes a notable showing of America's achievements in scientific astronomy.

THE END OF THE SEASON.

Fish and Game Protector McGuire came to the city yesterday, and at once interviewed the cannerymen concerning the rumor that they intended to fish into Saturday night instead of closing down at midnight last night.

He also communicated with Fish Protector Crawford of Washington, and decided to send patrols out along the river and arrest every man found defying the law. Mr. McGuire intends to give all boats a reasonable time to deliver fish caught up to midnight last night, at the canneries, but he desires to warn all cannerymen that the river will be carefully watched for the detection of the receipt of a single salmon captured after that time. In an interview yesterday he said:

"I am confident that during the present season the work of the Fish Protectors has been as effective as possible under the circumstances, but it seems certain that unless measures for the more efficient protection of salmon are taken quickly, disastrous results will follow. The only means by which this can be prevented are increased propagation at the hatcheries, a combination of cannerymen who will agree on a reasonable amount of fishing, and a change of the close season date to August 1st instead of the 10th. Last year, four millions of young fry were turned out into the river. The number should have been, thirty millions. If the present system of fishing continues with none of the remedies that I have mentioned, it seems to me that in five years the run of the fish into the Columbia will be so small that it will not pay to work a single cannery."

There has been a controversy as to the meaning of the words of the statute, which says that "the close season shall last from the 10th of August to the 10th of September." The point is whether this means the close season shall begin at midnight on the 9th or midnight on the 10th. However as it has always been the custom to consider the latter meaning correct, Mr. McGuire will not make any attempt to change matters, but a friendly suit may result, when the question can be legally tried and decided. The run of fish that started on Monday fell off considerably yesterday and the boats averaged only a shade over six salmon each.
