Reiter and Hansen Will Hang next Month

When Judge McBride yesterday passed the death sentence upon John Hansen and John Reiter, convicted of murder in the first degree, the circuit court room was full. Both the prisoners sat quietly with their attorneys waiting for the words of the Judge.

"But the defendant, John Hansen, stand up," said the Judge. "John Hansen, have you anything to say why the sentence of the court should not be pronounced against you?"

"No," replied the prisoner in a faltering and sobbing voice.

"You stand convicted," continued his Honor, "by a jury of this court, of the most heinous crime the law contemplates. You have had a fair trial; you have been defended by eminent counsel, and everything has been urged in your behalf that could be, and I feel entirely satisfied from the testimony, that the jury were not wrong when they convicted you of murder in the first degree. I think the testimony amply warranted them in finding you guilty of the highest crime known to the law. That without cause or provocation, you killed one whom every obligation of nature and every obligation of duty had taken upon yourself required you to protect, and anything that I can say at this time would do you no good. It might possibly be an example to those present by observing you in this position at this time; it might serve as a warning to the young man who is just beginning a career of dissipation and just starting on the down-hill road, which has brought you to this position in which you now stand; it might stand as an object lesson to some young man to stop and beware of the vice that has brought you to this. I take it, that if you had controlled your appetite and refrained from the use of intoxicating liquors, you would not now be before the bar of this court for sentence. But strong drink and the continued indulgence in it, has destroyed your manhood and has finally caused you to commit the act of which you have been found guilty. If there is anything that can be gained by this scene in this court, any lesson that can be taught to the men, young or old, by these proceedings and by your fate, it is the lesson to beware of indulging in the vice you have indulged in. Not only in your case, but in nearly every case that has been brought before this court at this term, this same vice, this same habit, has brought them here. It has brought many a young man and many an old man to a bitter fate. It has brought you here to answer for the highest crime known to the law. As I said before, I am satisfied that the verdict of the jury is correct, and while the ability of counsel may from time to time prolong the trial, it seems to me that in the end there can be but one verdict reached. It seemed to me when I heard this testimony, that if you were allowed to go out on the street and select from your friends a jury, their verdict must have been the same—that you were guilty of murder in the first degree. Let me assure you, that while you may be able to prolong this matter a month, two months, or three months, the possibility of your ultimate escape is very slender, and I urge you to occupy the time you have left in trying to make some atonement for the offense you have committed against the law.

It is the judgment of this court that you be taken to the jail of this county, and that you there be kept in close confinement until the time to be fixed by the court in its warrant for your execution, which will be not less than thirty days nor more than sixty days from this time, and that you from there be taken to the jail yard of this county, by the sheriff of this county, and that you there be hung by the neck until you are dead; and may God have mercy on your soul."

Hansen was then conducted to his cell by Sheriff Smith, and John Reiter was ordered to stand up and receive sentence of death. The prisoner in answer to the court, announced that he had nothing to say why the sentence of the law should not be pronounced against him, and then Judge McBride addressing him in a manner that the circumstances warranted, said:

"You have been convicted in this case of a most infamous and horrible crime. You went out and found a stranger who was friendly enough to treat you with kindness and share his bed with you, and, taking advantage of his unsuspecting nature and confidence, you went along the road with him, and for a few dollars, took his life—took his life in a most horrible manner. The evidence against you is conclusive. You did not know when you did that it would ever be known; you supposed that you would be beyond the reach of the law; that there was no one present but yourself and your victim, but the eye of the Almighty was upon you, John Reiter, when you did this, and you have been brought to justice by the vigilance of the officers, who have performed their duty in this case, and you stand here for punishment this morning. I do not know anything that possibly can extenuate your offense. There can be no reason or justification. You were sane and sober. The deceased had treated you kindly and shared his bed with you, and he had treated you as any Christian man ought to treat a stranger that came along and asked assistance or friendship, and you repaid it by taking his life for the purpose of robbery. I see for you no excuse. The evidence against you was so conclusive and convicting that nothing could be urged in your behalf. There were no extenuating circumstances. I have observed in you heretofore, somewhat of a disposition to treat this matter lightly, but let me tell you this is not a light matter. There is absolutely no escape. Within sixty days you must suffer the penalty of your crime; you must die. Your time is short, and while you can do nothing in this world—while there is no mercy the law can extend to you, or ought to extend to you, I urge you in view of that fact, to try and make some atonement. Try and fit yourself for the inevitable chance that must occur, when you will meet your victim before that court to which Judge, jury, and prisoners, alike, must give an account. And I urge you now, in the very few short days which this court will allow you, to prepare yourself for this, by a repentant frame of mind to make such atonement as you can for this awful crime.

Reiter stood with his head bent and his eyes on the ground, and did not seem at all impressed with the sentence, which was the same as in the case of Hansen. He has never looked a man in the face since the day he was arrested.

Judge McBride exercised the greatest delicacy in his remarks and while considering to both men in view of the fate he was sending them to, his voice lost none of its sternness when he impressed them with the horrible crimes that they were to answer for.

TO RESIST THE ATTACK of the germs of Consumption, Scrofula, Grip, Malaria, and many other diseases—means fight or die for all of us. These germs are everywhere in the air we breathe.

The odds are in favor of the germs, if our liver is inactive and our blood impure.

When it is used, most is an increase in our germ-fighting strength. To do this successfully you need to put on healthy flesh, rouse the liver to vigorous action, so it will throw off these germs, and purify the blood so that there will be no "weak spots," nor soil for germ-growth.

We claim for Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, that it does all this in a way peculiar to itself. It is the development of germ-killing power of our blood—it has stood the test of a quarter of a century of cures.

That is why the makers can guarantee it. In every trouble caused by torpid liver or impure blood, if the "Discovery" fails to benefit or cure, your money is refunded.

Proffer strong reasons for trying Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy. $500 if you can't be cured.

DR. GUNN'S IMPROVED LIVER PILLS ONLY ONE FOR A DOSE

IS YOUR STOMACH SOUP, Brain, bad or Head aching? One of these pills—lives in distress in the stomach and causes a rash, one such pill for a week's treatment, and each and purifies the blood. They insure perfect digestion, and promptly relieve indigestion, never gripes or sickens. Do not give up until you feel better. Beware of cheap imitations.
