The Portland Telegram publishes an item that gives the lie forever to those dastardly people who hesitate to believe in truth of the wonderful "25-foot channel." Here it is: "The British ship Yarana was to have started down the river yesterday in tow of the Ocklahama, but was unexpectedly detained. The vessel is loaded with grain for Europe. After taking on a large quantity of wheat at the elevator, the Yarana was towed out some distance into the stream, where 200 tons more were placed on board. It seems that the water was not very deep just at the point where the Yarana came to anchor, and as the river has been slowly falling for some days, the vessel was found to be aground when ready to start down stream. She was stuck fast when the towing steamer came alongside yesterday. She wouldn't 'budge a peg,' either, when the Ocklahama took a stiff tug at her. The steamer Thompson was called into requisition, but both boats could not persuade the Yarana to leave her position, even with some very strong hawsers. The rains up the valley have caused the river to rise about a foot since last night, and it is thought will enable the steamers to pull the vessel off into deeper water."

The scholars of the Upperton public school evidently don't mean to let the days slip by very far before they are able to call a piano their own property. Previous entertainments have not brought sufficient money in to make the way clear for the purchase of an instrument that shall be worth having, and the attempt is now to be made in real earnest to buy one. On Thursday night the first of these "piano fund" affairs will be held, in the new Upperton schoolhouse. It is to be a Long-fellow entertainment, and not the least interesting part of the program will be the reading of one of Longfellow's poems, illustrating tableaux. Several young ladies well known in musical circles have kindly volunteered their assistance, and the program will include several numbers of both vocal and instrumental music. No doubt the attendance will be large and the fund swelled considerably.

S. A. Clark, says the Statesman, is responsible for the statement that that hoary old sentinel, Mt. Hood, has gone to smoking again. He says he looked over toward the old mount on Wednesday morning about 10:30, and the sight to greet him was that of smoke issuing from the side of the mountain. Thinking he might be mistaken, or that it was a drifting cloud or a bank of rising fog that had attracted him. But no; it was black, sulphurous smoke, just such as volcanoes emit from their craters when they are active. He could not be deceived. The atmosphere was clear, and the dark color of the cloud-mass as it issued from the side of the mountain and lazily drifted to near the summit and off to the south argued to him that it was neither cloud nor mist. The wind, too, was from the south, but the smoke from the volcano's smouldering fires moved off to the south, only to be caught by the wind and returned a half hour later within the limits of the silent vigil of the summit. This is the third time Mr. Clark has had the pleasure of seeing Old Hood smoke. The first time was in February, 1868, when the smoke ascended from the crater in a solid column instead of broken as in this instance. The second time he witnessed smoke from the volcanic fires was some years later, when the sight was similar to that presented on Wednesday.
