A BATTLE MONUMENT.

The monument which has been erected upon the battle-field of Solferino is one of the largest, if not the largest of its kind in all Europe. It consists of a tower seventy-four meters high, surrounded by an electric lamp, and rises in seven stories, each representing a campaign in the struggle for the independence of Italy. Each separate story contains all the names of the generals and other officers as well as the men who fought in that campaign. No fewer than 700,000 names are thus inscribed on the inner walls of the monument On the ground floor are the busts and portraits of all the leading generals, and the chief ornament in the center of the ground floor is the colossal monument in bronze of Victon Emmanuel by the Venetian sculpton Dal Zotto. The tower stands in grounds beautifully laid out, and constitutes a magnificent memorial of Italian unity. Beneath the structure repose 200 skulls and other remains of soldiers of the three nations who fell on the field of

HORSE LANGUAGE.

My horse has a low whinny which means "water," and a higher-keyed, more emphatic neigh which means food. When I bear these sounds I know as definitely what she means as if she spoke in English. This morning, passing along the street, I heard that same low whinny, and, looking up, saw a strange horse regarding me with a pleading look. I knew he was suffering from thirst, and no language could make it plainer. The language of the lower animals is not altogether articulate. It is largely a sign language The horse does a good deal of talking by motions of the head and by his wonderfully expressive looks. He also, upon occasion, talks with the other extremity. A peculiar switch of the tail, and a gesture, as if threatening to kick, are equine forms of speech. The darky was not far wrong who said of the kicking mule, "It's just his way of talking."--C. B. Palmer in Science.
