COM-COMLY THE SECOND.

A Resident of Kettle Falls Claims the Proud Distinction.

A lineal descendant of King Com-Comly has appeared at Kettle Falls, and gives the following to the Pioneer of that place:

On my mother's side I am directly by legal succession of the blood of the sole king—known to history as such—of the Columbia and of all the Pacific Slope, in those latitudes, viz.: King Com-Comly, the truly royal host of the Astor expedition there in 1811 and 1813, and of all whites later in this realm. His relations with the whites had ever been most amicable. A leading officer of the Astor staff of the name MacDougal (Duncan) had, before the transfer of the establishment to the Northwest company in 1813, married an elder daughter of King Com-Comly, a handsome woman of proud, queenly mien, reminding me of Egypt's Cleopatra as pictured to us.

I distinctly remember her living in widowhood with her parents, and though my aunt, she was no friend of mine, she seeming ever to have some pique against me, which, however, I did not regard, as I then did not understand our relationship. She was childless, if I mistake not, while I believe I was not only the baby favorite, but the heir-presumptive of the old king according to Chinook and general Indian law. Some old people of the Columbia after the old man's death, used to call me or speak of me as Com-Comly, or shortly, Comly MacDonald.

WHERE DOES CHARITY BEGIN? A Correspondent Takes Exception to Sending Offerings to Portland.

The following communication will be found self-explanatory:

Editor Astorian:—I notice in the Morning Astorian that some of our good people intend meeting in the Presbyterian church today for Thanksgiving services. This much is very good, but I also notice that their intention is to take up a subscription for the benefit of a Portland hospital. You say in referring to the hospital that it is "dispensing five hundred dollars a month in assisting the sick without respect to religion, nativity, or residence of the needy," and refer to it in such a way as to lead those not informed to suppose that this is different from other hospitals in Portland and Astoria. I desire to say that the Good Samaritan and St. Vincent hospitals of Portland and St. Mary's hospital, of Astoria, are engaged in the same kind of work, and on the same terms, without respect to religion, nativity, or residence.

This thing of raising a subscription in Astoria to help the poor in Portland is something I cannot endorse. A few years ago I drew the attention of one of the good ministers who was particularly zealous in the work, to the fact that "true charity begins at home," and even in Astoria. That Astoria had many poor and afflicted people who needed all the charity we who lived here, had to bestow; that Astoria had a charity hospital as well as Portland, and that it was caring for the sick, homeless, friendless, and money-less, year after year, without any fuss or parade. That it was managed by those who have dedicated their whole lives to charity work; that the physicians of our city give their best skill to assist in this work, and that no one is ever turned from the hospital's doors who asks in the name of charity. And all are kindly cared for and nursed back to health without respect to religion, nativity, residence, or future compensation. I told the good minister this, and asked him if Portland ever raised a subscription to help provide for the poor and sick of Astoria, or if Portland churches or people ever interested themselves about our hospitals or other public institutions; and I finally asked him if he really believed that "True charity begins at home," and stays there until there is no further need for it. And the good man said he did believe that, and that as long as Astoria had sick and poor people, and he was a citizen here, he would practice his charity at home.

I will ask which city should be best able to care for its poor, Portland or Astoria? Which is the most wealthy? And what earthly reason can any one have for sending donations to the Portland poor and sick or a Portland hospital, when it is all needed here at home? J. A. FULTON.

A WONDERFUL MACHINE.

There is no doubt that man is a fine mechanism, but like every other machine he wears out by friction. It is said that he is born again every two or three years. His body is virtually remade from food. To retard this making over is radically wrong, as a man loses so much vitality in the continued process that it takes a long time to recuperate. The process of making new is so accelerated by purging with Brandredth's Pills that a new man, as it were, may be made in two or three months and the change in the mechanism is such that the worn out part is replaced by the new without the usual running down of the entire machine. You don't have to stop for repairs. Purge away with Brandredth's Pills the old, diseased and worn out body. They are purely vegetable, absolutely harmless, and safe to take at any time.
