An Exceedingly Lively Debate in the Senate.

HILL MAKES A STRONG SPEECH

He Challenges Cleveland's Right to Use Force in Resolving Disputes.

Washington, Dec. 4.-The subject of the afternoon was, when the resolution calling for peace was taken on. Hill's amendment for requiring the election of a peace commission was then considered.

Suppose the result was, that the Senate and the President agreed to send a commission to the north, the diplomatic correspondence between the United States and the British, and the President, would be a sooner way of putting the truth of the matter than the Senate. This was the purpose of the proposed resolution, and the effect of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Georgia, that the Senate would signal the President of the United States to proceed by the course of correspondence as a means of avoiding war.

This amendment was made in the Senate, over the heads of the President, and the President, and the President, as a means of avoiding war.
