Mr. Breckinridge, of Kentucky, is a very cheerful statesman about the tariff. He is for the Wilson bill, and ther a great deal more. He knows nothing about protection save the steady and ancient accusation that it interfered for the few against the many-the simple claim of the know-nothing. The interests that are affected adjust them selves to the tariff rapidly; and the tariff structure therefore should not be changed from the clearest convictions of expediency, and according to plain principles. McKinley built a tariff bil to harmonize and perfect the system and reduce the revenue, and began by adding to the free list, including sugar Mr. Breckinridge and his Southwestern people dare not attempt a real revenue tariff, and so get into trouble at the start, and have exhibited absolute feebleness of understanding. They throw off the sorrows of others, however, as ducks shed rain.

It is fondly claimed by the democracy that Mr. Springer-who was removed from the committee of ways and means because he had some sense about a revenue tariff-got away with Tom Reed in repartee. Springer was telling what things should be taxed, when Mr. Reed interrupted to ask, insinuatingly, "What about cutton?" to which Mr. Springer replied, "Cotton is free." "Then what are you talking about," asked the ex-speaker. "I am talking allout wool, not cotton," said Mr. Springer. "The gentleman must have MILES NERVE AND LIVER PILLS cotton in his ears." This is not bad, but is not as nest as the retort of R. G.
