The February number of Worthington's magazine is one of the best ever published, bright, fresh, and full of interesting articles, with fine prese work and artistic I lustrations that add greatly to the attractiveness of its piges. The leading article is entitled Peasant Life in Picardy," written in sprightly and charming style by Heler Evertson Smith. She has written of ner sojourn in Le Crotoy, one of the quaintest of little fishing hamlets or the coast of Northern France. Its sole claim to historical importance lies in the possession of a ruined strongrold known as the "house of Jeanny d' Arc," where through many weary months the patriotic Maid of Orlean. was held a prisoner, though not in strict captivity, leaving it only when taken to Rouen where she suffered cruel and unjust death at the stake New phases of simple, honest, laboricus, but cheerful life are portrayed to the reader with the sympathetic, appreciative touch of the word-painter. The article is lavish y illustrated with many beautiful reproductions of photographs and noted paintings.

The speaker said in part: These Scriptures have a clear and definite meaning. Be ye separate in your manner of life, your walk and conversation. It is manifest this scripture is addressed to the followers of Christ.
