New York correspondents sometimes onfide some startling things to the eaders of papers throughout the counry. They have a way of hanging their eports of fashion upon the pegs of zell known names, and the provincial eader absorbs the result with trusting aith. The Vanderbilts and Astors are he chief sufferers by this attempt to ive an air of realism to New York ashion letters, but other well known cople come in for their share, as, for astance in this item: "Mrs. and Miss trayton Ives were among the congreation, both attired in black astrakhan
