A PRIZE FIGHT.

George Buchter and Frank Turk Hammer Each Other.

Yesterday's Oregonian contains the following account of a prize fight which took place outside the city limits of Portland on Sunday afternoon:

Frank Turk, a sailor boarding house runner of this city, and George Buchter, a would-be pugilist of Astoria, met in a finish fight outside the city limits yesterday afternoon. Buchter knocked out his opponent in the fourth round with a swinging right-hander on the jaw, and was declared victor. The battle was a hot one from start to finish, both men displaying considerable science, but going in to win with a rush.

Over 200 spectators, toughs and "sports" from the North End, witnessed the mill, and yelled with delight every time a blow was struck. The place of the fight was the old driving park, about a mile north of the North Pacific mills and close to the railroad track. A few hours before the battle Chief of Police Hunt was notified of what was about to take place, and he dispatched Officers Quinton, Johnson and Coleman to prevent a meeting within the city limits. They could see the contestants pounding each other, but were powerless to put a stop to the proceedings. As soon as possible Chief Hunt notified the district attorney of the affair, giving him the names of the contestants and several of the spectators, and it is thought that arrests will follow.

The referee produced two pair of gloves which he carefully examined before giving them to the principals. The names of the seconds, bottle-holders and time-keepers could not be learned, although they are known to the police. At the call of time both men sprang confidently to the center of the ring, and commenced sparring for an opening. They lost little time in getting down to work, and before the round was half over they were thumping each other in a manner which nearly set the crowd wild with delight. Turk dealt his opponent several staggering blows, and had decidedly the best of it when the round ended. In the second round Turk was knocked down, but again had decidedly the better of it. Buchter assumed the aggressive in the third round, and not only floored his opponent a second time, but punished him so unmercifully that he was groggy when time was called. Turk was game, however, and when the fourth round opened he made a furious attack upon his adversary. Buchter saw that his opportunity had come, and after giving Turk a little time to fire himself out, hit him a terrific blow on the jaw, which sent him sprawling. Turk attempted to struggle to his feet, but was unable to do so, and finally lay still until the referee had counted him out.
