We do it by a line of goods that isn't surpassed, and by prices that are lower every day in the year than the so called Bankrupt Sales, which some of our contemporaries herald with the blare of deafening advertisements. Plain, honest statements count for most.

THEY SAY there isn't a slower city on the coast than Astoria. They'll say directly our clocks are slow. Then next, we suppose, they'll be saying that there isn't a slower store on Third Street than 502—our citizens book store.

We must be awfully slow. We don't know how to buy our blank books from manufacturers who use scraps in covers or have ill-paid binding. Our manufacturers don't know how to make the common cheap sorts and have us sell them for first class. They're afraid to—that's a fact. We don't want to know how.

But we're wide awake enough to buy the best, and slow Astoria is wide awake enough to buy it from us.

Griffin & Reed.

A SCENE OF CONFUSION

Bland's Silver Bill Causes an Uproar in the House.

PRESIDENT'S VETO SUSTAINED

A Democratic Ruse to Hide the Dissension in the Ranks of Their Party.

Associated Press. Washington, April 4.—In the house, Representative Caminetti introduced a resolution providing for holding a conference of nations of the western hemisphere to draft treaties remonetizing silver.

Philbustering was resumed to prevent the unseating of Helborn, republican of California. The democrats were several votes short of a quorum.

Helborn, of California, was finally unseated. At 4:15 roll call on the passage of the Bland bill over the president's veto created great disorder. There was a heated controversy between Speaker Reed and others. Reed was ordered to his seat.

The vote at the end of the first roll call stood—yeas, 130; nays, 45. More than two-thirds voted to pass over the veto. The republicans did not vote. On the second count the vote stood—yeas, 144; nays, 116, not the necessary two-thirds.

Bland stated that on Saturday at 3 o'clock he would demand the previous question. From all quarters of the democratic side there seemed to arise a conflict of opinion, and Bland's suggestion of three days' debate was met with cheers and cries of "Vote," "vote." Then followed one of the most remarkable scenes witnessed in the house in years. Tracy, who was standing in the side aisle, said that as far as the democrats of the minority of the coinage committee were concerned, they were willing to take a vote immediately. Shouts of approval from the democratic side, Stone, of Pennsylvania, who made the minority report against the bill, replied he was unwilling to close the debate at this time. When he ceased speaking there was great confusion on the floor. Members on both sides were conferring in groups. The speaker, with uplifted gavel, surveyed the house for a moment. Bland expressed his willingness to have a vote taken immediately. Reed, Dingley, Burrows, and Stone were in earnest consultation, and they agreed that Dingley should make the opening argument for his side.

The speaker stated the question to be on the motion to pass the bill to pass the bill, the president's veto notwithstanding. "On this," said he, looking down upon the confusion on the floor, "the constitution requires that a vote shall be taken by yeas and nays." Again he paused, but no one addressing, he added, with a bang of the gavel, "The clerk will call the roll." There was a gasp of astonishment on the republican side as they awakened to find that the roll-call had begun.

The democrats, who were anxious to see the debate suppressed, were overjoyed. Among a great uproar a dozen republicans jumped to their feet and clamored for recognition. They saw the coveted opportunity of exposing to the public gaze the dissensions in the camp of the enemy slipping from them, and they fought hard. The confusion was so great that the clerk got no further than the first name.

"Too late," shouted the democrats, as Reed tried to make himself heard.

At last, by hard pounding, a semblance of quiet was restored.

"Mr. Speaker," said Reed, "my colleague, Mr. Dingley, was ready to address the house upon this question before roll call began."

"The gentleman, Mr. Dingley, made no such statement until the first name on the roll had been called."

"The reason he did not," said Mr. Reed, "was because the gentleman from Missouri, Mr. Bland, was entitled to the floor, and I submit to the speaker and the house this is a notable breach. My colleague was ready to address the chair, and if he did not do so it was because in the confusion the first name on the roll was called before an opportunity was afforded to the house to know what the situation was."

"Regular order," shouted the democrats. The speaker then explained the situation. His explanation was not satisfactory. The republicans, led by Reed, were appealing for recognition amid shouts of "regular order" from the democratic side. The excitement was intense.

"I want the speaker to understand this matter," said Reed, finally.

"The gentleman will take his seat," returned the speaker.

"Certainly I will," replied Reed, but he still remained standing.

"The gentleman will take his seat," continued the speaker.

NEARING A CONCLUSION

The Breckenridge Case Drawing to a Close.

A REBUKE TO THE SPECTATORS

Judge Bradley Gives them a Tongue-Lashing for the Morbid Curiosity Evincing.

Associated Press. Washington, April 4.—Breckenridge was extremely pale this morning. He denied asking a colored woman at Goldsboro to cook for him after he married the plaintiff. He never professed affection for the plaintiff, but was solicitous when he knew she was about to become a mother through him.

He went with her to certain places for an understood purpose. He placed his arms about her and kissed her, but both understood there was nothing deep.

He denied having placed the plaintiff in the care of Mrs. Blackburn, saying he intended to marry her. He thought Mrs. Blackburn was confused about some matters.

Col. Breckenridge avowed Mrs. Blackburn's description of nearly every one of the material occurrences when their paths were crossed are wrong, but qualified his denials by the statement that she had confused dates and places; had put constructions not intended upon his utterances; had attributed to him things said by Madeline Pollard, but asserted as a saving clause, that she had no doubt honestly endeavored to give her recollection of the events. Tomorrow the defense will close.

The inquisition suffered by Breckenridge at the hands of Judge Jesse Wilson regarding the testimony of Mrs. Gov. Blackburn would be the talk of the city tonight but for some remarks from Judge Bradley which enlivened the close of the proceedings and obscured all other features of the case.

For days past, since the case reached the zenith of its sensationalism, crowds of men, boys, and women, many of them well dressed and respectable in appearance, have thronged the court, corridors and sidewalks, and even the street in front of the offices of the attorneys at the hour of adjournment, waiting for the principals to appear, elbowing for vantage points, indulging in personal comment, and making things so grossly disagreeable that the objects of their attention have been driven to make their escape through the side doors, adopting various maneuvers to avoid unpleasant notoriety.

Judge Bradley has in the meantime been smothering a growing feeling of disgust. Tonight his emotions passed the safety gauge, and he gave some of the people such a pointed tongue-lashing as has rarely been heard in the court room.

Mr. Butterworth, defendant's counsel, drew out the colonel in reference to a conversation between himself and Miss Pollard regarding their marriage. She had told, he said, that his wife was dead, and there was nothing to prevent him from marrying her. He replied to this with some anger, and she said if he would change his tone she would retire from society; give up trying to get in society and be his mistress; take care of his room and do his type-writing. He had told her that under the circumstances she was the last person who could do his typewriting. She had insisted she would not leave him, but would go wherever he went. Then they had walked together to a house on H street where they had been accustomed to visit. His anger had cooled down and he sat down; she sat on the floor with her arm on his knees, and they talked far into the night. He had told her that after their relations he could not marry her; that no man could be expected to marry a woman with whom he had had intercourse unless he had seduced her.

"You know I have not seduced you," I said, and Col. Breckenridge continued: "She urged me to marry her or account of those relations. I said, 'I can't afford to put Jim Rhodes' mistress and my mistress at the head of my family.' She threw up the window and said she would scream. Just then some one rapped at the door and said

WHERE THE BLAME LAY.

The Cause of the Reported Indian Uprising.

Chicago, April 4.—A telegram was received at Headquarters of the Missouri today from Col. Purlington, commander at Fort Reno, regarding the alleged Indian uprising in Oklahoma. The telegram said that on April 1, near Wichita, a war arose between two white men and Chief Hill, a Cheyenne, concerning the ownership of a pony. Chief Hill was shot and mortally wounded by one of the white men, W. L. Breeding, and the latter was in turn shot by the chief and killed. Chief Hill also shot S. Hunter in the arm. The Indians were quiet and proposed to await the action of the authorities rather than resort to reprisals for the killing of the chief.

AN ANARCHIST'S BOMB.

Paris, April 4.—Another bomb explosion occurred here this evening near the senate chamber about 9:30. The bomb was placed in a flower box on the window sill of a restaurant opposite the chamber.
