The Astorian guarantees to its subscribers the largest circulation of any newspaper published on the Columbia river.

Advertising rates can be obtained on application to the business manager.

This paper is in possession of all the telegraph franchises, and is the only paper on the Columbia river that publishes genuine dispatches.

The Daily Astorian's circulation is five times as great as that of the combined circulation of the other daily papers of Astoria.

The Weekly Astorian, the third oldest weekly in the state of Oregon, has, next to the Portland Oregonian, the largest weekly circulation in the state.

Subscribers to the Astorian are requested to notify this office, without loss of time, immediately they fail to receive their daily paper, or when they do not get it at the usual hour. By doing this they will enable the management to place the blame on the proper parties and to insure a speedy remedy.

Handley & Haas are our Portland agents and copies of the Astorian can be had every morning at their stand on First street.

GOOD TIMES COMING.

If business men would take a more encouraging view of the situation and business outlook it would go very far to restore prosperity by restoring confidence. The following cheerful commentary from the Pioneer-Press is pleasant reading just at this time:

"Good times are coming, and coming soon. You don't see all the improvement that is going on under the hard dull surface of the business situation, any more than you can see the grass growing in these early spring days, under the gray mat of last year's decay or the buds swelling on the brown branches of the bare trees. But all the same, in spite of the ups and downs of temperature, of the changing moods of the fitful spring, with its alternations of sunshine and rain and snow; through all the weary waiting for settled weather, the grass is growing and the buds are filling out; and very soon, almost before you know it, the rich, full life of summer will burst upon us in all its green glory. The same hidden, silent processes of recovery are going on in the industrial and commercial, as in the vegetable world, and they are so linked together in the economic relations of farm and factory, of field and shop, that it is pretty safe to predict that by the middle of July, when the summer shall have reached its fullest luxuriance, there will be a corresponding development of business activity. For by that time the crops will be so far advanced that if they give, as now seems likely, the promise of a good harvest, it will be discounted in advance by the pressing necessities of the farmers. The stocks of the country merchants, which have been allowed to run exceedingly low because the farmers have had no money to purchase goods, will be cautiously replenished, and long before the next crop is harvested its effects will be felt in the general and marked revival of business. Meanwhile the grass will keep on growing and the buds will continue to swell in all the lines of industry and trade, as well as in field and forest, and before you know it the summer will be here with its plenitude of plant life, and with it, if we are not mistaken, will come that full tide of business activity which means good times for us all."

An exchange says Jerry Simpson's illness was of sufficient gravity to keep him away from the banquet of the New York Single Tax club, at which he was to respond to the toast, "The Farmer." This proves that he has been a pretty sick man. No trifling indisposition would induce the statesman from Medicine Lodge to forego a gratuitous indulgence in "teripun," "clarlet" and other tempting delicacies for which Mr. Simpson has frequently manifested an orthographical disregard, but a hearty gastronomic appreciation.

Binger Hermann is wasting a great deal of time shaking hands with the people of the first congressional district. So far as any opposition is concerned, he might just as well go on to Washington and be sworn in.

BENEDICT ARNOLD'S LAST YEARS

The last twenty years of the life of Benedict Arnold were probably the most unhappy that ever fell to the lot of man. The British were willing to use him to promote their own plans and to pay him for his disgraceful services, but everywhere he was held in such scorn and contempt that for years he scarcely ventured to appear in public life. Before his treachery he stipulated for a fortune in cash and a commission as major general in the British army.

He got both, and soon spent the former in speculation, while the latter did him no good, as no officer in the army would serve under him; and although his talents and bravery were unquestioned, he remained to the end of his days a general without command, even at a time when the British government was sorely pressed for officers and men. In 1798, during the French war, when the country was anxiously gathering all its resources, he applied to the Duke of York for a command, but was refused.

He went home in despair, and said to his wife: "They will not let me find a soldier's death." He never rallied after this blow, and soon after his mind appeared to wander. He ordered his continental uniform to be brought, and put it on, including the sword he had worn when in the American service, and so he died, a raving maniac, in 1801, at his residence in London.

THE HOMELESS BOY.

The mothers who are getting their little ones ready for Sunday school this morning no doubt would shed copious tears and hug their darling boys close to their hearts if they thought it possible that some time in the near future those boys would be left alone in the world, and the only person to prepare them for Sunday school, if prepared they were at all, would be a police officer, and the place of preparation the office of a city jail.

This is the case with the bright little boy, Arthur Fallon, in whom Capt. Hallock has taken such an interest, and who has no home and nowhere to sleep except upon the lounge in the waiting-room of our city prison, where at any time of the day or night he may be disturbed by such prisoners as are brought in. Capt. Hallock, who is a good judge of human nature, says Arthur is a bright boy, and has all the elements of a good man. The little fellow's school books, consisting of a fourth reader and a copy-book, show him to be well advanced in his studies, good penman, and, for his age, a scholar that any mother might be proud to have her son equal.

The boy stated to a reporter that he had attended the Cedar street school, and a call on his teacher, Miss Dealey, was made. Miss Dealey stated that he was never absent except on account of sickness, that his deportment was excellent, and his school habits were also good, and that she disliked to lose him as a scholar.

He is a handsome boy, and if he is 14 his looks deceive one, though his school books indicate that he was advanced to the grade of pupils of that age.

When attention is called to the boy's case people shake their heads and say: "They ought to do something for him." The question naturally rises to the reporter's lips: "Who is 'They'?" but before he can make the inquiry the person with whom he is talking has moved on and the question remains unanswered.

If this reaches the eyes of "They," it is to be hoped a call will be made on Capt. Hallock, and that he will be assisted in his efforts to find a good home for the poor boy before it is too late.

THE NURSE'S DELIGHT.

Every experienced nurse knows the value of a remedy which, without being an anodyne, will relieve soreness of the limbs or stiffness of the joints, and enable a patient to sleep quietly and naturally.

Just such a remedy are Allecock's Porous Plasters. Placed on the chest or on the back, if necessary cut into strips and placed over the muscles of the limbs, they work marvels in the way of soothing and quieting restlessness. Being perfectly simple and harmless in their composition, they can be used freely, and many a sufferer has thanked them for a night of quiet rest, grateful both to him and those who care for him.

LITTLE BABY WAS RAW

Distressing Skin Disease from Birth. Cured in 5 Weeks by Cuticura. Now Healthy as Can Be.

My baby boy had been suffering from birth with some sort of an eruption. The doctors called it eczema. His little neck was one raw and exposed mass of red, inflamed flesh. His arms and across and under his thighs, wherever the fat flesh made a fold, were just the same. For four weeks after his birth he suffered with this eruption, and until I got the CUTICURA REMEDIES, there wasn't a sleep for any one. In five weeks she was completely cured. He was nine weeks old February 1, and you ought to see his skin now smooth, even, and a beautiful pink and white color. He is as healthy as he can be. The CUTICURA REMEDIES has given him tone, vigor and strength. I enclose his portrait.
