ASTORIA'S BOOM. What the town of Astoria seems to need is a live man, with plenty of brains and good judgment, to look after new manufacturing and business concerns for it.

Many think a railroad all that is needed to start the town. There never was a greater mistake. A railroad has now become essential to the future growth of the town.

The fact is, the kind of "railroad boom" so much hoped for by some citizens would actually deter the right kind of people from coming to Astoria.

intrinsic advantages be best set forth? It is obvious to all who are acquainted with Astoria that it has every natural advantage that favors Portland and the cities on the Sound and many additional advantages beside that these towns can never have.

Portland is today one of the substantial cities of the United States, and this proves the existence of business of one kind or another in this section of sufficient volume to support a large city.

Mr. E. L. Dwyer has said that in all his travels and study of the localities and geographical advantages of the towns and cities of the United States, he has found no place that equals Astoria in certain important particulars.

If some energetic young business man who has lived in Astoria long enough to be thoroughly acquainted with the advantages and possibilities of the place, and a man having sufficient interests and investments to make it an object to him, aside from the salary involved—

The following from the Morning Oregonian is one of the neatest comments on the political situation we have seen for a long time.

The New York Sun says: "Year after year, and all the time, the criminal reports of the city are vastly more favorable to women than to men.
