This was at low tide. For fear some fellow would find her and it was impossible to reach them by steamer, as the men were in three feet of water, while his steamer drew six feet. He could not lower a mat, owing to the heavy sea, and as the next best thing to be done, under the circumstances, he stood by them and whistled for relief until a sailboat took them off. He said the men were in no immediate danger, and if they had kept their wits about them they would not have lost their boat.

FISHERMEN MISSING.

The "Lucky Fisherman" and His Boat-Puller Reported Lost.

Grave fears are entertained for the safety of "Big" John Mattson, otherwise known as the "Lucky Fisherman," and his boat-puller, Dave Howard. Late Saturday evening his boat was seen in the breakers, and late yesterday afternoon the men had not come home, and the wife of Mattson was almost prostrated from the mental anxiety she was undergoing from his long absence. It is possible that the men have drifted out to sea and been picked up by some craft, but there is room for serious anprohension in regard to their safety.
