A feat of rapid cable service is the talk of business circles of Charleston. A Liverpool firm opened negotiations by cable with a Charleston broker for chartering a steamship to carry 10,000 bales of cotton. Within forty-five minutes the matter was settled.

The Astorian very seldom does any bragging about its increase in circulation, though it very often has cause for so doing. The number of names added to the daily list during the past week, however, is very encouraging, the number being an even 35.

Yesterday the Signal came down from Portland and docked at the A. S. Co.'s wharf. After talking on considerable freight, she left out for Vancouver, B. C. Three of the Chinese who were brought around on the last trip accompanied the steamer back to the Sound.

Did you ever count the number of times you raise your typewriter carriage while writing a page? If not, try it. The Franklin has no heavy carriage to raise every time you wish to see what you have written. Coast Agency Co., corner 5th and Commercial streets.

It is not generally known that the Japanese excel against the world as telegraphic electricians. Their instruments are superior even to the American, and as operators they are the smartest in existence. Yet, curiously to relate, the Japanese telegraphs are controlled and directed by Englishmen.

Postmaster Johansen reports that Seattle is one of the busiest places in Clatsop county, just now, and he does not even except Astoria when he makes the assertion. The sawmill is running under a full force, and that keeps the logging camps going. Then there is the detainer mill, and the public school, and a whole host of things that are too numerous to mention, but all of which add to the general activity. The public and private improvements go steadily on and contribute largely toward the good times they are having.

The Astoria merchants, says the Cathlamet Gazette, are complaining that large quantities of potatoes they are receiving from this section appear to be infested with a species of dry rot. The potatoes appear sound on the outside but in cutting into them the blight is discovered. One particular case in mind where a party had shipped one hundred sacks of potatoes, surprised to learn they were diseased, made a personal inspection and found the firm was absolutely correct. Ralph Elliott gives it as his opinion that potatoes should only be grown from seed raised east of the mountains.

The British ship Yeoman was brought up from Sand Island yesterday and anchored in front of Flavel's dock. She is a vessel of 310 tons register, and was last year coming up from Redondo, where she discharged a part of her cargo of cement. Captain White says that Redondo is an awkward place to be in, as there is only one wharf, and when the cooling stater came into port he had to haul away so as to allow them to land. The cargo for Portland is made up of cement, coke, beer and glass. She left Antwerp on the third day of May last, and was twenty days in Redondo.

The British ship Rosshire, 21 days from San Diego, arrived in yesterday morning. She is a vessel of 2148 tons register, and comes in ballast. Captain Alexander commanding. Early yesterday morning Capt. Doig went aboard the Rosshire, and despite the fog, sailed her right in past the end of the jetty and abreast of Fort Stevens, where the escort picked her up and brought her into port, arriving at anchor at 1 p. m. Coming up from San Diego, Capt. Alexander had a fairly good passage. He was here about four years ago, and made many friends during his brief stay in port.

"The newspaper correspondents who are following the war have a hard assignment to handle," said Julian Ralph, the well-known member of Harper's staff, who returned from the Orient by the Empress of China Tuesday. "For weeks they hung about Tokio, exerting all their energies and trying every means at hand to secure permission to go to the seat of war. The authorities were, however, hard-headed, and deaf to all arguments upon the necessities of journalism. Finally they did relent and the correspondents rushed to Corea. They arrived there as best they could, by teak steamers, transport and cable boat. But what was it to find? When after all their weeks of waiting they reached the seat of war—why, the seat of war had gone. Corea was deserted, and the scene of action had shifted to Manchuria, just as far away and as difficult of access to them as ever. When the Japanese government permits them to go forward you may depend upon it that the action is over, and all that is written must be told in the past tense."

In several of the coast papers of late, a controversy has been going on regarding the proper designation of vessels registered in the Kingdom of the Republic, both of which have been in port during the past week, and have been admired by many visitors on the waterfront. One or two of the papers call them bark, but that is wrong, as they are not barks, but are sailing vessels, speaking of their rigging, that they were ships, pure and simple, even though they were four-masted. A bark, he said, is a three-masted vessel, the two forward masts with yards, and the tier mast rigged fore and aft, or without yards. A ship, he said, is generally known as a vessel with three masts, all rigged with yards, and he claims that by simply adding the fourth mast, i. e., a jigger mast, it is not a bark, but a ship, and leaves it still a ship. A vessel like the Kentmere and the Republic, he thinks, should be designated as a four-masted, full-rigged ship. Some one has suggested that the vessel be designated as a Republic, but one could just as incorrectly call Simpson Bros' schooner, Louis, a schoonertine, because she has a fifth mast. There are, however, barks with four masts, and the Olympia, which left Portland, which was in port on the 16th of September last year, had four masts, the two forward being rigged with yards, but the two after masts having none. She was a proper four-masted bark.

N. Flaisig, who victimized several people in this city by representing himself as an agent of the Guarantee and Accident Lloyd's Casualty Insurance Company by selling them accident policies in that company, has evidently disappeared from Portland and sought pastures new. Constable Oberg having returned from the metropolis after an unsuccessful search for him. Flaisig also had a statement published in the Sun exonerating him from all blame in connection with his Astoria operations. Thus armed, the swindler is now in all probability working some other field in favored security.

PERSONAL MENTION. Mrs. E. Rice and daughter, Winifred, left for the East last Wednesday evening. Peter Shisab has returned from Rose Hill, Oregon, where he has been for the past three months superintending the canneries of Samuel Elmors.
