AN EXTRA SESSION LIKELY.

Whether President Cleveland is merely threatening the Democrats with an extra session in the hope of extorting from them some sensible action, or has really concluded that nothing can be expected from this congress, and that it is best to appeal to Republican good sense as early as possible, the talk of a meeting of the next congress immediately after the 4th of March gains force, it is said, every day at Washington. There is little doubt that the compact and well-led Republican minority could compel an extra session if it chose. But no leaders of prominence have seemed disposed to force an earlier assumption of legislative responsibility than the Democrats themselves may make unavoidable. With the senate so divided that the Populists may hold a balance of power, and with the executive veto at President Cleveland's disposal, Republican partisanship can see but little to gain by hastening the inevitable conflict of opinion between the president and congress. It is not improbable that errors might be made in the anxiety to get something accomplished under circumstances of difficulty, which might not reflect credit on the Republicans. On the whole, in a partisan point of view they have some risks to run, and not much gain to expect, if an extra session is rendered necessary.

But regard for public interests appears to call for a different preference. The country needs most sorely speedy legislative relief. The condition of the treasury, which probably has the foremost place in Mr. Cleveland's mind, does indeed demand action of which there seems to be no prospect at this session. Democratic hatred of bondholders and the Demo-Populist passion for more and cheaper money are likely to defeat any measure providing for protection of the public credit. It would be the first duty of the Republican majority in the next congress, if an extra session should be called, to make provision for the necessities of the government, and they would presumably authorize a popular loan with such promptness as to give a sense of relief in financial circles. With a measure of that sort would naturally go such restoration of protective duties as congress might be able to decide upon without delay, leaving the work of a general revision until later.

The plain truth is that the industries and the business of the country stand sorely in need of such intelligent changes as a Republican majority would most quickly make. Great uncertainty about the maintenance of gold redemption, it is highly probable, cannot be removed until the Republicans have taken charge of legislation. Anxiety about disorganization of the national banking system will also linger as long as this congress lasts, and the depression of industries by exposure to foreign competition will not cease until the Republicans have begun to make laws. The people have done everything it was in their power to do at the last election to transfer the law-making power to the Republican party, in the hope that it would be able to provide some speedy relief. No question of party tactics will stand in the way of the performance of such a duty, and the president himself, if he has read the signs of the times aright, will be glad to see a change of the restoration of prosperity during his two remaining years.

Although the appropriation necessary to restore the collection of the out the expected opposition from the Republicans, it must not be inferred that they are in any sense reconciled or committed to it, and if an extra session is held that provision at least of the tariff law will be promptly repealed. Larger revenue is indeed required, but not by a process so odious and so unfairly sectional. The sure and speedy way to get larger revenue is to provide ample defense for home industry against undue foreign competition, and it may be presumed that some important steps in that direction would be taken as speedily as possible if an extra session were called. President Cleveland would have power to resist, it is true, but a revenue law and a bill providing for the necessities of the treasury would naturally go together, and if he were called upon to bow to the will of the people in regard to the tariff policy, or by refusing to leave the government without adequate resources, he would have no right to hesitate.

In this issue of the Astorian appears the full tabulated statement recently prepared by County Clerk Dunbar, showing the financial condition of Clatsop county for the last half of the year 1894, and as has already been suggested in these columns, it is a showing of which the county has reason to be proud. Whatever may be said on other grounds against the salary system, tax payers will be gratified to note that a saving of nearly $2,000 has been effected as contrasted with the old plan of official compensation, and this, too, during a period when less new business has been transacted in any one of the various county offices than during any corresponding period for many years past. Mr. Dunbar is entitled to much credit for the plain and concise arrangement of his statement, and it will be readily comprehended and appreciated by every tax payer in the county.
