There is a difference between our suits and others that we know of. One difference is the shaping, another is its workmanship, and another is in the style of goods. Nearly all of ours are imported cloths; you can see in that why every third man along the strot hasn't a suit like we said you, and why ours look different. It takes more than wood and from to make the difference between a ferry-boat and a day ocean steamer.

The loss of so many vessess during the severe storms of the past winter has caused a general feeling of uneasiness their enthusiasm in regard to the road in this port regarding the Cupica, but old sea captains, who have spent the better part of their lives on the turbuient ocean stoutly maintain that some staunen old bark into port, and surtown yesterday, still held good for prise his friends who are inclined to tiegeve he and his crew have mot their fate in one of the great storms The state board of pilot commission of the past winter, and now lie at the ers had an election at their biennial bottom of the ocean. From a friend meeting which was held yesterday. of the captain the following sketch of schools which have been celebrated for sending the majority of their scholars now lying in Esquimait harbor, was to sea. Before he was 15 years he had made several trips to sea with his father during his school vacations, and when he left school he understood navigation as well as any old sailor. This is Captain Casson's second voyage to the Columbia river, he having arrived here on the Cupica in August, 1892, after an average voyage from Liverpool. During this trip he had a great deal of trouble with his men, who mutinied and only for the prompt action taken by Capt Casson it might have resulted very seriously. As it was, when the ship arrived in Portland there was a court of inquiry appointed and each mutineer forfeited his pay, and the first mate having his certificate revoked.
