MRS BALLINTON BOOTH

Speaks Before the Merchants Exchange at St. Louis.

THE PACIFIC BANK DIRECTORS.

They are Sued for $2,000,000 Alleged to Have Been Squandered By Them.

Associated Press. St. Louis, April 1.—At the closing hour today President Booth called the Merchants Exchange to order and introduced Mrs. Ballinton Booth, of the Salvation Army. Mrs. Booth said this was the first time she had ever had the honor of addressing such an audience. She referred to the former contempt of the Salvation Army was held in and the changes that had come over the people. Now, instead of a feeling of repugnance, churches and people were lending their aid in every way. "The Salvation Army," she said, "is not organized for the purpose of taking away from any church its members, but to bring them more members by redeeming from sin and darkness those who are found in the highways and byways, the poor, needy and fallen." Mrs. Booth's remarks were listened to attentively.

San Francisco, April 1.—P. F. Dundon, representing the depositors and creditors of the defunct Pacific Bank today began suit against the former directors of the bank for $2,000,000 alleged to have been squandered and misappropriated by them. EDISON'S PHONOGRAPH.

New York, April 1.—The World says: Thomas A. Edison and his phonograph are going to join hands once more and the wizard of Menlo Park promises improvements and novelties which will astonish the public. The phonograph has been controlled by the North American Phonograph Company, which went into the hands of a receiver last August. The company was capitalized at $5,000,000 in 1888, and James H. Lippincott, the promoter, went insane when he found it was a fraud. The receiver has been advertised for bids for the entire assets and Edison's offer of $120,000 has been accepted.

THEY COMMENT THE PRESIDENT

Washington, April 1.—The president this morning received a representative delegation of Chicagoans in behalf of the leading citizens of Chicago, irrespective of party affiliations, to invite him to a public reception to himself and Mrs. Cleveland, as an expression of appreciation of his steadfast insistence of sound national currency. The president expressed gratification but gave no assurance of his acceptance. An spokesman for the delegation, Mr. Roberts described their reception as follows: "We were received very pleasantly and explained to the president the non-partisan character of the invitation. We also told him the business men of Chicago heartily endorsed the movement. While it was intended as a personal compliment to him, it had still a further motive in view, the development of an aggressive sound money sentiment throughout the West."

Their families escaped on horses, but Henry Eller was fatally burned, and a negro farm hand, perished on Eller's farm. William F. St. Louis, April 1.—A morning paper states that at a meeting held recently at which were present some of the best known grain merchants of St. Louis, formerly associated together under the commercial title of the Merchants Elevator Co., which went out of business in 1890, to be succeeded by the St. Louis United Elevator Co., measures were enacted which promise to unfold one of the profoundest business sensations ever known in St. Louis. Regarding the Merchants Elevator Company, founded by Captain D. Slattery in 1886, W. F. Anderson, one of those interested, said: "The strangest feature is we cannot account for about $35,000 or $40,000 worth of wheat that was in the elevator. We had also $100,000 worth of bonds on the elevator, which we never ordered him to sell, but they are not accounted for."

UNDER THE VERANDA.

(By Hugh Kal.) It is surprising how all the characteristics of Celestial life are displayed among our local Chinese population, small as it is, and it is also a matter of comment to the observer how our pig-mailed brethren ape, and sometimes enlarge on, the manners that distinguish their Caucasian surroundings. Take, for instance, the vanity we call pride, caste, society, and the like. There are a great many old residents among us who have always considered the locality opposite the north side of the postoffice as a hotbed of cosmopolitan life, where all live together in democratic unity, surrounded all the crack of doom by a very apparent odor of decayed vegetables and opium. But, barring the odor (which is strong enough to take care of itself, and needs no denial) this is not the case. The different degrees of social life are very strongly marked in our Chinatown, and I have often noticed with amusement how plainly the trait shows itself. On the lowest rung of all stands that ubiquitous gentleman—the swill Chinaman. He is divided into two classes, the swill Chinaman from choice, and the swill Chinaman from necessity, the latter being a market gardener who, possessing a discriminating eye for the exact quality of swill most suited to his purposes, prefers to do the work himself rather than entrust it to a menial. The expert bows to the common selector, and generally passes the time of day with him when they meet at neighboring coal oil cans. Next on the social ladder, and probably the best known to our housewives comes the "fruit John," otherwise known as the Vegetable Chinaman. He recognizes the swill Chinaman by a grave nod when they meet and very seldom troubles to give any other response to the latter's hearty "good morning." He himself is snubbed a little further on when he proceeds up Chinatown with his baskets and passes through crowds of "contract men," taking the air in front of the various stores. These represent the next grade. They are day laborers living and boarding with various merchants till they are packed off to work by contract in Alaska or elsewhere and redeem their board money. They only notice their humble brother who vends vegetables, by barely concealed sneers and various remarks calculated to make him blush. Then we can watch how they in turn cringe and make way from the doorsteps when the bookkeeper of some store approaches. He gets lots of open homage, being the sole resort of the contract man when he wants a few cents on account for opium or some other delectable commodity. The bookkeeper too is responsible for their good behavior, and never refrains from lashing with his quick tongue some unfortunate who has helped himself too much to the tea, or broken a pane of glass when taking down a door shutter. But the bookkeeper himself, feared as he is, also comes under the lash of this social system, when he meets the eye of his employer, the portly merchant. "The old man" (they call their boss "the old man" in Chinatown just the same way as most of the clerks do in the other parts of town) never deigns to know anybody but the merchants who stand on the same grade of respectability and wear clothes of as good quality as himself. He keeps an eye on his bookkeeper, and never lets a slip go by without reprimand. This jolly individual knows only one percentage in town that he can know how to without losing his dignity. He is the retired business man who has amassed a competency, who has been home to China two or three times, and who is a sort of father to the community. And finally we have the whole fabric, from retired merchant down to swill coolie, bowing to the ground before his most noble highness—the occasional distinguished Chinese visitor from Portland or San Francisco.

Here is positively the latest. The proprietor of the Astorian has been given an ironclad guarantee that if it hurts the paper financially he will not pull out a loser. Last night a well-known Irish singer was dining in the Occident at the table next to Hammond and the rest of the "railroaders." The polite waiter approached him as he took his seat and, gliding up to his elbow yelled as usual "Wattleave have tonight sir? The billofare is beefsteak, mutton chops, ham and eggs." "Hammond eggs?" replied the Irishman, "sure them must be the kind that hatches railroads." Stanton faintly and had to be carried out into the air.

I see that the milkmen of Astoria, or some of them, are talking of forming a combine "to protect themselves against people who don't pay their milk bills." A couple of new purveyors of milk have come to town, however, and have started cutting rates. This, it seems to me, is the meaning of such a sudden desire for a combine, and it is a little bit mean, to say the least, for the milkmen to try and cover up the real reason for their conduct, which the public are sure to get onto sooner or later. In this direction as well as others, new methods are coming in with the railroad, and people will no longer tolerate a milk service with filthy cans, whom they can turn to hewcomers and get both decent goods and decent delivery. Some of our milkmen, of course, don't come under this category, but one or two of them do.
