In the event that the latter proposition is carried out, it will greatly depreciate the Grimes property as it will throw the travel far to the north. The people at Seaside are willing that Mr. Grimes should fence in the county rond the same as he has already done with the beach, so that stock cannot roam at will over his domain, but they object to his inconveniencing the public by putting a gate across the bridge, which is a county theroughfare. A party of gentlemen, determined to see for themselves the work being done, and its magnitude, started out for a walk over the right of way. The summit of Fifteenth street hill was reached, when a short rest was taken before un dertaking the tramp over unfinished roads. The afternoon was beautiful—a soft and dreamy sort of day. In the blue haze of distance, over the tree tops and valleys below, could be seen Saddle mountain, like a sentinel, ever watchful, standing guard over Nehalem valley, while the glistening waters of Young's and Lewis and Clark's rivers, with the intervening green meadows, made a picture whose beauty never tires. From the summit the trail, a broad driveway which follows along the south-ern side of the ridge, in its many windings through the erstwhile trackless forest presents many wild and picturesque scenes. Here a high embankment across some ravine gives a glimpse through the dense forest where the thick underbrush effectually excludes all but the mos hardy; there the stump of some monarch of the woods by the roadside, now covered with lichens and ferns, tells of some past storm of mighty force. Again the mountain towers high above the road-way, its sides, almost perpendicular, cov-ered with moss and the ever present graceful ferns, a feature of the coast landscapes. Now the road passes between high banks on either side, cut through the hill, and dips into the ravine below, spanned by a high bridge. A gray squirrel, on the side of a large tree, barks saucily at the intruders, but show little sign of fear. Further along a turn in the road brings the ramblers upon a colony of handsome blue jays who scold lustily at being disturbed, but are too tan ted take to flight, their bright plum-age asongst the dark green of the foliage maki<sub>ing</sub> a pleasing contrast.

A give of men and teams on the road mentarily cease their work to gaze as the strangers, when the loud voice of the ubiquitous foreman is heard to exclaim to them, "well lads, are you'se fellers layin' off?" The way is now through the denser woods and is refreshingly cool, the sweet scent of freshly turned earth mingled with the natural aroma of the forest is fully appreciated by the dwellers in doors of their gypsylike tents, while the tempting odor of the evening meal, under preparation, reminds the visitors that they, too, are hungry. The camp is pitched in a beautiful spot in the heart of the woods, a spring of ice cold water a hundred feet below in the ravine furnishing a rever failing supply of that necessary adjunct to all abodes. An interesting study of human nature was given in the motiley group of man the given in the molley group of men, who for the most part were much more in-telligent looking than the majority of this class of laborers. In one group, an evi-dent leader was making a talk to his fellows upon some subject of seeming in-terest, as all at times interrupted the speaker with remarks, and the gestures earnestness and flow of words in the musical language of Italy claimed the attention of the visitors even though they did not understand the meaning of what was said. After a short rest and refreshment at the spring, with the well wishes and farewells of the campers ringing in their ears, the wanderers returned to the city well repaid for the fatigues of the

It was said by one of the party that he did not believe one-half of the people realized the vast amount of work involved in pushing a twelve-foot road through a dense forest, and that the city of Astoria might well congratulate itself upon the rapidity with which this work is being done and the thorough and substantial character of the construction. The chief engineer in charge and the various contractors have done faithful and skillful work at a surprisingly low cost to the city. When completed and thoroughly macademized Astoria will have a grand boulevard, twelve miles in eagth, affording the most beautiful and picturesque of views, and which will for-ever be a source of unfailing pleasure and pride to its citizens. Perhaps few realize now the advantage of such a driveway to a city, but it will be ap-preciated in the future, and it should be nished now, when it can be done cheaper than afterwards, in the most permanent manner, and not simply as a roadway for the water pipes.

Severul days ago an account was print ed in these columns of an interview with a visitor in the city who gave a descrip tion of the neglected city cemetery at Catsop, where the fences are down and the cattle were tramping upon the brush-grown graves. Hillside cemetery is also in much the same condition—both a dis-grace to a community like this, according to the views of one of Astoria's prominent citizens. That gentleman stat-ed to an Astorian representative that it mands that some respect be shown to the when the city should take some action towards putting both of these burying grounds in good repair. To be sure they are not used quite so much as formerly but the self-respect of the Eving di-mands that some respect be shown to the honored dead. He further stated that profitable lessons might be learned from the enterprise of two or three citizens who with limited capital had supplemented the art of nature and had made  $\alpha$ apot of beauty at Greenwood-a fitting resting place for the friends gone before. Beautiful flowers and shrube have been planted with lavish hand and will soon grow in profusion. The grass is kept green and paths and passageways clan and free from-weeds and brush. Addi-tional land is cleared every year and put In the course of improvement. Contracts were let only yesterday for the clearing of eight more acres in this cemetery. If private enterprise can, by careful and close work, not only improve but keep in repair and proper condition such a burial ground, the city surely could keep from decay the burying places already in existence, even if no effort was made to improve. THE EASTERN HOP PROSPECT.

The reports so far circulated in regard to the hop crop having suffered much damage from crops, we believe to be largely in error. The froats following each other in such close order and in such severity as to form ice that would bear a man and freeze the ground one inch in some places, have stripped the leaves entirely off the vines in some places, sometimes killing the entre vine and sometimes killing the enire vine and sometimes only removing the top a foot or so. The damage must be quite heavy and will reduce the coming crop to nearly one-half that of last year. Such is the opinion of many prominent growers. The roots have not wintered as well as usual and many miss hills and uneven yards are reported. The backward and cold weather of late has kept growers from working their yards and training the vines until the crop will be largely reduced by lack of cultivation. The hard times and the low prices combins to discourage growers from hiring the necessary help to manage the yards. And while we have not yet heard any reports of vermits, which may appear later, the other causes mentioned above we believe, will reduce the crop nearly, if not quits, one-half on the average. THE NEW SURVEYS.

REPORT OF N. D. RAYMOND. Survey Made of County Road from Seaside to Tillamo

Mr. N. D. Raymond, deputy county sur-veyor, has just returned from surveying a county road through township 4 north range 9 west, and township 5 north, range west, about six or seven miles from Seaside: He states:
"I left Astoria on May 11th and began work on the 14th in section 32, township 4 north, range 9 west on the south line of Clatsop county, and the north end

Tillamook county road. We ran up the North Nehalem river for a distance of three and one-half miles, where w crossed the river; thence in a north-westerly direction to Buchanan Creek which we reached in six miles; then fol-lowed up that stream for about one-half mile, crossed the same and reached the summit between the waters of the No halem and the Necannicum at abou eight and one-half miles. We then cross ed at the same pass used by the Asto ria and Albany railroad survey and fol lowed down the south fork of the Ne cannicum which we crossed between th ten and eleven mile posts and intersected the main Necannicum near the twelve mile post. From thence we went down that stream to the second mile post on the old survey from Burman's north line near Seaside. "The route follows a graded road fo four or five miles on the south end, and the residents of Seaside are now gravelend, south of the new bridge at Phile "The grade to the summit is very easy from either side, and at any point on the road is laid out to not exceed ten or road is laid out to not exceed ten or twelve per cent for a short distance. On the south slope are large tracts of fir, spruce and cedar which will un-doubtedly attract attention as soon as the road is opened. The total length of the road is nineteen miles, which short-ens the survey of three years ago by about three and one-half miles." This survey opens up two townships which were surveyed by the govern ment last year, and will be of great benefit to the settlers and those who take up homesteads in that vicinity, besides giving an outlet through to Tillamook county.
