THE "DOG DAYS."

We quote today the following excellent article from the Interstate Grocer, of St. Louis. Every retail and wholesale merchant in the country will recognize in its statements some homely truths that are brought home to all of them at this season of the year:

"We are now rapidly approaching that time of the year which the Germans have named the 'dog days.' We are not posted as to the origin of the term, nor do we know why they named the dull days of the summer as they did, but the term has been tolerably well accepted in the English language and by it we mean the dull days of mid-summer when the climate is enervating and hot and when all life, ambition and activity that is inherent in man is well nigh crushed out of him by the climatic influences which surround him. It is of course worse in that respect as we approach the southern portion of the country and those of our friends who live in the North near the lakes or near the ocean escape the trials and the tribulations which the dog days bring to us. It would be exceedingly pleasant if those who write for newspapers could exercise the same privileges which are exercised by subscribers. With the latter it is optional as to whether they wish to read or not; with the former it is a matter of duty and they have got to write even though they resemble the flower that is born to bloom unseen and to waste its fragrance on the desert air. This of course is putting in a doubtful way the plain statement that they must write even though they know that their effusions will go into the waste basket.

In different lines of the trade dog days have a varied significance. In those lines that have what are called seasons, merchants expect very dull trade between the seasons. Proprietors and favored employes may avail themselves of the dullness incident to that period and take their needed vacations. The business of these lines is crowded into perhaps four months in the year. The balance of the time is divided between fair and dull trade. With the grocer matters are different. While he, too, is somewhat dependent on the seasons, his business is not at all influenced by fashion. The amount of groceries consumed does not vary materially from one month to the other except in so far as the human body requires more nourishment in cold, bracing and exhilarating weather than it does in the hot, languid and enervating temperature of the summer months, but there is no rest for the grocer on account of dull trade.

"At the time of the year that is duller he is supposed to be at the helm making contracts, taking orders for future delivery, watching the sugar market and amusing himself with the many pleasurable pastimes that the grocery business furnishes. While his neighbor, the clothing, dry goods, shoe or millinery merchant goes to Europe or to the south, the grocer stays at home and consoles himself with the thought that he belongs to the majority, while his neighbor belongs only to the few. There always have been various views as to which of certain classes enjoy life's blessings most. The one class that believes in many wants and supplying them all; the other that believes that man wants but little here below nor wants that little long. Judging by what we have seen almost all the wholesale grocers in the land believe with John Quincy Adams in the latter doctrine. For ourselves we are free to admit that in this case we are again with the minority. We believe in a large earning capacity and in a liberal enjoyment of all that we can consistently have for our families and ourselves. We would prefer to spend the dog days in Europe or at the sea-shore, but at the same time our aversion to staying at home and working during the summer months is not so great but that we can make ourselves comfortable under the circumstances and cheerfully carry the burdens allotted to us."

What the tariff tinkering of the last Democratic congress was to the whole country, the present suspense and uncertainty about the railroad question is to the business interests of Astoria. Although the fishing industry is at the very height of one of the most successful seasons in years, and the greatest public improvement ever undertaken in the history of the city is in full progress of construction, trade languishes, and there is a general complaint that business or all kinds is duller than was ever known before. This condition is due to nothing else but the dread of the reaction which is supposed to follow the collapse of the railroad project and the abandonment of the bill by Hammond, though it is hard to see how any condition of the future could be worse than that of the present, or what there is to be re-acted upon. It is strange that the men who own the property in Astoria, and who have nothing else in the world to depend upon, should be responsible for the delay in beginning the railroad construction. These men ought to realize what a desperate policy they are pursuing. They ought to know from previous experience that they must come to the pending proposition sooner or later. Months of valuable time have already been wasted—months of time in which Astoria might have been in the full enjoyment of the prosperity sure to follow the commencement of work on the railroad, and which would have brought more than the return of every dollar of liability they are asked to assume on account of it. And yet with a weakness and fatuity which has positively become disgusting these people are still hanging back in the hope that by some manner of means Hammond may be induced to forego his rights under the contract which avails back to the state, and eagerly expect to see with him. There is reason to believe that Mr. Hammond has sized up the situation exactly; that he understands the caliber of the men he has dealt with, and that he well knows if he puts his money in the railroad without first insisting that he be given all that was promised him as an inducement to do so he will never get it. The men who are standing out on the bond proposition might just as well come in and make an end of it. Hammond will not make another move until he gets it, and he will not take it until the whole stipulated number have signed it. Hard as the terms imposed may seem to some of our people, the only alternative is to comply with them or get no railroad. The interests of the city demand that the matter should be decided one way or the other immediately, and it is to be hoped that Hammond can be sent for to go to work by Monday, or else be given to understand that he can go about his business and leave Astoria to the peaceful enjoyment of at least her fishing interest.

The present condition of the London money market furnishes occasion for sarcastic comment on the silver crank plea that money is scarce because of the adherence to the gold basis. The United Kingdom has been a gold monometallic country for nearly eighty years, and in that time the mischief should have had plenty of time to develop to its full size if it really were the evil the silver monometallics claim it to be. But the Chicago Tribune quotes a London financial journal as saying that the bankers there are overburdened with deposits which they cannot employ. "The means of employing surplus balances in the channels ordinarily appealed to no longer yield any compelling remuneration, and bankers and big financial houses are obliged to compete severely with the investment public for gilt-edged securities." This explains the recent rise in console and the active buying of American securities noted for some weeks past. The silver extremists who are ranting about the scarcity of money ought to look at this condition and see if they cannot deduce from it a truth which up to date they do not perceive. The truth alluded to is that one of the best ways to make money plentiful and cheap to those who want to borrow on good security is to leave no doubt in regard to the value of the money, to have it 'as good as gold.' If any confirmation of this were needed it might be obtained from a look at the conditions in this country which followed the resumption on a gold basis at the beginning of 1873.

The shallowness of the silver craze, and its adherence to the maxim of Zach Chandler in claiming everything in sight, has another exposition in its utter failure to command any influence at the Cleveland convention and the fact that the leader of the anti-silver element there was the same Senator Thurston who at the time of his election, was published all over the country as one of the 'friends' of silver. The convention has shown its good sense and republicanism by refusing to have anything to do with the silver miners' scheme to boom their product at the expense of committing the party of honesty and intelligence to the knavery and ignorance of populism.

The New England Grocer, a trade paper that has long led the way in the ranks of trade journalism, with its last issue passed its thirty-seventh year. Its long life has been made possible by the honest policy of its able staff, and its unwavering adherence to principle. That it may live long to continue its honorable career is the sincere wish of the Astorian. Such journals as the New England Grocer are a power for good that extends much farther and penetrates deeper than most people outside of trade circles are inclined to imagine.

THE CRAZE DYING OUT. Silver Bugs Will Soon Cease to Spout So Vehemently. In a recent interview Gustave H. Schwab, chairman of the executive committee of the sound money committee of the chamber of commerce of the city of New York, said concerning the chamber's attitude against free silver: "The high watermark of the silver craze has evidently been reached. The most significant thing to emphasize in this fact is the action of the popular states convention of Des Moines, which Gen. J. B. Weaver and his followers, who represented the radical wing of the party, were completely turned down by the more conservative element. The one cheering thing of the whole fight is that the populist party is disintegrating and that sound sense is finding a foothold among the farmers. The campaign of education is bearing fruit, and unless all signs fail before the presidential election occurs, next year, the rampant silverities will be routed home and foot. "Both political parties are making bids for the sound money sentiment among the voters, and it is believed that the Buckeye state will be found in line with the eastern states on this great question. Indiana shows a strong following of sound money men, and the indications are that Senator Voorhees, the champion of free silver, will have a hard time to convince the honest farmers of this state that fifty cents can be made into a dollar. The issue of the so-called Sprigg convention in Illinois has proved a champion on the issue and expectations of the silverites."

MIND AND MATTER.

Dr. Heinrich Haeckel. One of the greatest triumphs of the human mind, and beyond comparison the most important step hitherto taken towards solving the world's enigma, was the discovery that an object implies a subject, i. e., that any object, for instance a tree, can not by any possible stretch of imagination be said to exist, unless there be at the same time an eye to see or a hand to touch it—in other words, mind to conceive it. In extension of this discovery it easily follows that the entire "external" world can have no independent existence, viz., can not be real, except as a mental phenomenon, and that if mind should ever be destroyed or cease to exist, the world, as a matter of course, would cease to exist. This discovery was made thousands of years ago by subtle reasoners in over-sea Hindostan, and its deductions are a very even marvelous accumen in the Upanishads, which are philosophical treatises appended to the Vedas, a treasure of wisdom of which the logic of our modern luminaries sounds like the wretched child's prattle. In those glorious treatises we have an epitome of the wisdom of sages who pondered over life's riddles long enough before the first pyramid was built, long before the pyramids were built, long before Abraham roamed the plains and before his cattle, a treacherous and savage Bedouin. And, like a golden thread drawn through the Upanishads is the ever-recurring lesson: "Matter is an illusion; mind alone is real."

GRIP AS A DISEASE. A medical authority says that grip is a disease, and must be treated as such. It can not be ignored, the world's enigma is consoled away. It must be accepted, and allowed to wear itself out. As a rule, readjustment comes slowly. Sorrow, grief and weeping are the result of great misfortunes should be regarded as akin to acute infectious diseases, which require the same kind of treatment as the common cold, influenza, and other ailments of this class of illness, seclusion, rest, sleep, appropriate food, fresh air, and attention to those caused by bodily ailments, and a regular regimen of work, study, and amusements, as both useless and dangerous. For a time the whole organism is overthrown and the recuperation is imperative for proper readjustment. Medical observations show that the physical results of depressing emotions are similar to those caused by bodily ailments, fatigue, chill, neuralgia, and loss of blood. Birds, moles, and dogs, which apparently died in connection with the same kind of conditions that correspond in human beings to acute nostalgia and "broken heart," were examined after death as to the condition of their internal organs, and it was found that the nutrition of the tissues had been interfered with, and the substance of various vital organs had undergone the same kind of degeneration that brought about by tuberculosis or the germs of infectious disease.

A QUIET POINTER. The Ellensburg Capitalist thus notes a Yakima lawyer's capital comment on the recent review at YACMA, an attorney of that town got converted and was announced in the river with several others. "You are among the first to be baptized, and on coming out the side to the minister, he comes with his hithering cry, 'You're better than those other people further up the river, who are a lot of big rocks under you ducked in.'"

REMEMOR. Do forgive today thou mayest regret tomorrow; For though today may die, his ghost will linger. And haunt thee with a ceaseless sigh of sorrow. And point remorse with an accusing finger. Say no unkindly word, or like an ember. In a dead fire, a breath will blow it living. The penitence is to remember. When tears are vain and wrongs are just forgotten. —Charles L. W. Froth. —From Demorest's Magazine for July.

As to its possibilities as a health resort,—there is the most perfect sunshine, with a temperature always pleasant, a perfectly dry soil for rain is an unknown factor; pure oxygen, dense atmosphere and pure water. What more can be desired? It is the place, above all others, for lung troubles, and a paradise for rheumatics.
