An Astorian reporter called at the county jail last evening and asked Mr. Feakes oncerning the nature of his arrest, and if possible to obtain his side of the story. He had just finished his supper and though suffering from a severe head-ache, was quite willing to talk to the reporter. He said: "I received word from my wife a short time ago that the street car company was ready to make a settlement for the loss of my little girl on their cars, and asking that I come down or else send a power of attorney. I did not feel sure which was the best to do, so sought the advice of several business men, who informed me that by all means I should go down. Shorely after I met another gentleman, with whom I am well acquainted und he told woman it was hardly necessary for me to be present. I had stated to perhaps twenty persons that I would likely go below to assist in the settlement but before I had decided to go, the papers were served on me and I was arrested an placed in Jail."

ILLITARY BELT CLASPS POPULAR. Shirts with stiff fronts are as much in favor as ever, the others being no longer seen, which is fortunate, as they were a sort of sloppy-looking, untidy style of garment. The belts that are worn with these afford, not unfrequently, an indication of the character, and even of the status of the wearer, many of them being jim-crack, tawdry things, got up merely to please the eye. Those which most struck my fancy were worn by women who had induced soldier friends to provide them with military clasps These look exceptionally well on a small waist, and there is scarcely an officer who is not being pestered by his fair relatives and friends for regimental belt
