The man on his way home from lodge even stopped long enough to remark that the man in the moon seemed about a quarter full or else he would not be out flirting with the stars at this hour of the night; poor soul! He'll see more than one star by the time he reaches the silent chambers of his domicile. One man brought out his field glass so as to get nearer the phenomenon and catch an inspiration, while another looked through a beer glass and felt inspired and still another, said that he would get his fish line ready, because when he was a little boy he saw a similar crossing of the night illuminators and on the next day he caught a 80-yard string full of trout. A member of the subsidy committee was setting 'em up for the boys, because this alliance between the moon and the star showed the near approach of the railroad. It was truly a wonderful sight, this pale face, nicknamed the "moon," cavort-ing and playing hide and seek with the bright little star. Talk about the feet of Trilby or the shades of Moses! Why, alogside of this combination of the golden moon and the silvery star, the two little girls in blue are nowhere; why, even the dull, moon-eyed Chinaman, who is the preserver of salmon and the perverter of truth, caught the inspiration and paid a nickle to the phonograph man at Beveridge's cig-store to hear the music from the star. eigar

ART LOAN EXHIBIT.

Wit and Baeuty of the City Visit the Giantess.

As darkness approached last evening the stentorian tones of Mr. Hen Wors-ley could be heard for blocks away in viting the passers by to "walk in and see the bearded woman, the Persian snake charmer," etc. Attracted by the noise a press representative visited the loudiy advertised Dime Museum and found it to be a part of the Ladies' Art Loan Exhibit. The freaks and curiosities are truly wonderful. Among the most novel were the bearded woman, the dwarf from India, the Persian snake charmer, the giantess from Sydney (re-cognized by his friends), the Seven Sutherland Sisters, the Ten Thousand Dollar Beauty, the big footed woman and skel-etons in the closet. The room was crowded the entire evening, with an amused audience which voted the enter-
