COMBINATION TAG.

The canny men of the Columbia are quick to forget. They do not seem to imagine that details of their business methods are sufficiently known to outsiders to enable those outsiders to speak with any degree of certainty about matters affecting their interests. And we are sorry to say that in some instances, even when canners have been compelled to acknowledge the excellence of suggestions made, they have failed to act on them simply because it might look like conceding too much, might compromise them as it were to acknowledge that they did not know all about the idea before it appeared in print. This is neither business nor common sense.

The tag label proposition that we have advocated more than once in these columns is not a new thing nor do we claim any special merit for having brought it forward, but the Astorian desires to say that the proposition, in connection with the Columbia River salmon industry, contains the germ of one of the finest strokes of commercial enterprise ever made by any body of men on the continent. Since the advocacy of this matter was started by this paper, Printers' Ink, the most expensive advertising medium in the country, has seen fit to make mention of the idea editorially and to advise its adoption. The free advertisement thus given for hundreds of dollars. As we have before stated the adoption of the combination tag and the judicious and systematic advertising of the trade mark thus decided on in the leading family papers of the country will not only educate the consumer quicker than he can be reached in any other way, but will make his influence felt before next season's fishing begins. Throughout the winter months this advertising should be continually kept up, and the harvest will be reaped in the spring. Not as long, mark you, as the farmer has to wait for his crop by a good three months. And yet the canners hesitate and, taking refuge in the fact that they are at the present moment a little busy, try to bury the idea under a bushel of heaped up letters and think no more of it.

We hear a great deal in this part of the country about the "effete East," and the smart, wide-awake, soft-hearted business geniuses of the West, but it seems as if the real conditions have been reversed. Confident methods in commercial life and that free habit of superiority that a man unconsciously breathes in from the air when he comes to the western part of the continent, are all well enough and no doubt go a considerable distance towards success. But they are not everything. It takes deep thinking, and lots of it nowadays, to keep one in the front rank of the business world. New ideas and fresh original methods must have full swing. The operator must, above all else, be bold, shrewd, and above all else, be able to beat his competitors by superior generalship. And the Columbia River canner has competitors who, up to the present time at any rate, have proved themselves just as capable and as bright as he has been dull and slow-witted. The ideas of the hundred village grocer with an established trade in candies and tobacco, and with an abiding faith in the efficacy of his "stand" to bring custom, are precisely on the same plane as the business notions of our local canners. One class has no more originality of method than the other, and both alike are imbued with that spirit of calm confidence which makes its possessors blind to every channel of progress and improved methods.

From the humblest peanut vendor who tries by a calico attachment to his steam cooker to attract purchasers, up to the largest manufacturers in the world, ranges this spirit of advancement in business methods. "Forward" is the watchword of commercial life, the very essence of commercial existence, and the men who persistently refuse to wake up and get out of the rut of old-fashioned ways may as well shut up shop right away. It will come to that before long, anyhow, whether they do it now or not.

We know that the average man has very well imbedded notions of his own importance, and that he is loath to be told anything that reflects on his extraordinary brilliancy, or his marvelous powers of perception. But we cannot help thinking that it has got to the time when a few straight words to the cannermen of the Columbia River will not be out of place. They have come to the meeting of the road. Ten years of stupidity have landed many of them in rocky harbors, and in a few more seasons several will be hunting in a pained and anxious manner for a soft landing of places. They had better wake up at once, while they may want to sleep, and if they intend to allow their all-pervading knowledge to point out the road, they had better quit business at once. If on the other hand they can get together enough common sense to read the signs in the commercial sky they will be enabled not only to save their great industry for succeeding generations to thrive on, but will have the satisfaction of reaping the benefit of their change of heart before another year.

James S. Stanton, a noted South American mining expert, passed through Washington recently, and, discussing the free silver craze which he found in his travels through parts of the South and West, expressed the opinion that it would be well for the free coinage advocates to investigate the experience of countries that have been on a silver basis for years.

"I have watched," said Mr. Stanton, "with considerable interest the arguments and prophecies of free silver advocates. I have wondered why some of them don't produce the evidence of some one who has been an actual resident of a free silver country. Free silver countries are numerous to the south of us, and, surely, there must be a number of good people close by who have had more or less experience as residents in those countries. They are qualified to tell, not how it might, could, would or should work, but exactly how it does work. From long-continued daily intercourse with merchants, clerks, and laborers, and people in all the vocations of life in such countries, I know what are the conditions of people in free-silver countries.

"Why elaborate on theories, when the actual results and cold facts are easily accessible and almost stare us in the face? In the free silver latitudes I have been honored with the personal acquaintance of nice-looking dry goods clerks, who had reached the salary limit at $3 per week (in our money). Dignified, barefooted policemen at $13 per month (our money). The merchant has to depend on cable quotations from foreign countries to keep informed what his own native money is worth. The large mercantile house pays for regular cable advices so many times a week. He never knows when he closes at night what his money will be worth next morning. I have seen scores of pay rolls paid out in which all section laborers (railroad) receive 50 cents per day in silver. These countries had magnificent cities before this government was formed, and yet every nineteenth century improvement has had to be proposed, carried there, introduced and operated by enterprising citizens from gold countries. The free silver natives often ask why their dollar is worth two-thirds less than ours."

The victory for the sound money men on the platform delivered in the Kentucky convention was complete and overwhelming. At every point the silverites were beaten. This is an Appomattox victory for the honest dollar cause. Outside of Colorado, Montana and Nevada, the silver monetarists are outnumbered, outclassed and discredited.

The report that a British fleet is to be massed on the coast of Nicaragua indicates two things: (1) That England proposes to dispute the control of the Nicaragua canal by this country alone; and (2) that it regards the Cleveland administration as better to shove around than the next one will be.

THE SILVER CORNER.

What a Washington Correspondent Says of the Subject.

Chicago Times-Herald. That the whole silver movement has been engineered by the mine owners of the great silver producing states no active politician here can doubt from the evidence seen on every hand. The any corner on silver has been attempted at the present time is doubted by the hard money men themselves, for the reason that so long as President Cleveland remains in power free coinage is an absolute impossibility. On the contrary, official figures show that the output of silver from the western mines has lately been substantially reduced, and evidently under the control of a central guiding agency. The influence of men like Marcus Daly and his associates in the silver movement has been shown in the scale for political effect. The silver ring has no need to buy silver and hide it away. They control most of the big mines, and they have to do is to let the white metal lie in the bowels of the earth, restrict production, and spend money to water down the silver of the good sections of the country into the belief that free silver would be a panacea for all the financial and social.

It is a known fact to every politician in Washington that the silver ring represented by Marcus Daly and his associates has been putting up the money for the campaign in Democratic states this summer. Slightly toby who have been out of a job for years have suddenly become out into generous content, and there has been money to burn for all the hangers-on who trained with the miners' combination.

Miner's corner of silver has lately been made to capture the convention of the Republican league club at Cleveland last week. This organization at its meeting in Denver last year pronounced in favor of both gold and silver in a rather obscure way, but expressly avoiding any indorsement of the free coinage 16 to 1 lunacy. The mine owning crowd had numerous henchmen at Cleveland and men were there and delegates from southern states who have been familiar figures on the streets of Washington for years. The money for this movement on Cleveland, as well as for the propaganda of this spring and summer came from the mining kings. They are waiting for 1896, for they know their attempt to create a fictitious value for their silver until that time is blocked by the hostile attitude of the administration.

"All this talk of Senator Cameron of Pennsylvania pigging up money for the silverites with the expectation of becoming their presidential standard bearer is rubbish. Nobody knows better than the Pennsylvania senator that he could not go to a convention supported by his own state on any such question and be to the man to waste money chasing a will-o'-the-wisp. If there is anything in the silver movement at all it is in the interest of Senator Teller for the presidency, and the talk about Don Cameron is a side issue. Silver will be the topic most discussed in the next national campaign, but it is not likely that an eastern man will be honored with the first place on the presidential ticket."

Miner Director Preston has supplied the figures showing the stake Daly and his associates are playing for. They have cut down the production enormously and devoted the money saved in operating expenses to a fund whose sole purpose is to hoodwink the people, by using the money to buy a spring delivery for the United States in 1895 ran up to $5,500,000 fine ounces. Last year, as shown by Director Preston's latest estimates, which will be subject to slight revision, the production of silver in this country was only 4,500,000 ounces, a reduction of 1,000,000 ounces. To this extent the mining syndicate is running a corner, for it has stopped mining as far as possible, but it has not sold its mines, and experts say there is more silver in sight in the west than ever before. The product of 1892 could be equaled in another year without trouble and with but a small comparative increase in operating expenses. The coinage value of the silver output of 1892 in this country, as estimated by the director of the mint, was $2,150,000, but the bullion value at 65c cents per ounce, the average market price the last year, was only $2,925,000. Thus, on the basis of the 1892 output, the mine-owners would in one year make over $400,000,000 in free coinage at the expense of the people of the country.

Owing to the low price of silver hundreds of rich mining properties in the United States are being abandoned, and only those which have been worked which have special transportation facilities or in which silver is not the only metal mined at a profit. Competent men say the annual silver production of this country under a free coinage stimulus could be pressed to a hundred millions of fine ounces without difficulty, and the relative cost of production would actually be decreased. The center of the agitation for silver the last year was in the United States among the leaders of the movement were Teller and Wolcott of Colorado, whose state in 1892 had a record of 3,602,330 ounces of silver; Power of Montana, with 2,650,000 ounces; and Idaho; Dubois and Shupe of Idaho, who talked for 2,461,800 ounces; Jones and Stewart of Nevada, representing only 46,000 ounces. An amazing story from the four states of Colorado, Montana, Idaho and Nevada contributed in 1892 to the world's stock of silver 10,000,000 fine ounces. When the total output of the five states is added to 6,077,000 ounces, or within about 3,600,000 ounces of the total production of the world in 1892. Stewart went to Memphis with Shupe and both he and Jones have cut themselves off from the Republican party and are now in the employ of the government of Montana is expected to manage the forces of the silver men at Cleveland. Dubois of Idaho has been in Washington pouring out threats of rebellion, but he will turn up at Cleveland. Teller is the real candidate of the silver men for the presidency, for Don Cameron comes from the silver states, and has no real silver sentiment, while Shupe is a good fellow who knows more about fine horses than mining and could not tell a piece of posnock silver from a chunk of iron pyrites.

ROMANCE FOR JULY.

Among other good stories the July number of romance contains a thrilling tale, by Conna Doyle, describing the attempt of a Corsican brotherhood to assassinate Napoleon Bonaparte and tell how the chiefs of the league were brought to an untimely end in a amusing story from the French of Paul Arens shows how a cunning peasant sowed the wind and reaped a rich harvest. In addition to these are tales by Howard Fielding, J. Cutcliffe Hynes, Ludovic Halevy and others.
