outdid themselves. Eastern oysters on the half shell, fish of all kinds, roast meats and fowl, dellcate entrees and seasonable deserts loaded the well appointed tables in the handsome dining room where the rays of the declining sun made a most cheerful scene. The corps of efficient colored waiters noiselessly and skillfully supplied the wants of all. Laughing repartee and attic salt sea soned the good things before the guests, who one and all voted the first spread a great success. When it is considered that canneries along the river. While in the Astorian office great interest was taken tender mercies of Manager Barmore, who gratulated upon the successful manner in which he met the emergency, the house hardly yet being in full running order. After dinner all repaired to the beach to enjoy the evening air. As the sun went down fires were lighted of drift wood and a pleasant hour was whiled away in story telling. Returning to the house they found the broad verandas and parlors ablaze with light and every arrangement made for comfort.

Prof. Thielhorn, with his violin, and Miss Edith Conn at the plano, furnshed an impromptu concert to the delight of all. Many of the ladies and gentlemen improved the opportunity by dancing upon the verandas and in the corridor. Sunday dawned a perfect day and after partaking of an ideal breakfast the enire party took the train to Seaside where they scattered in all directions along the beach, visiting the Holladay place and other points of interest. The return to Gearhart was made by special train in time for luncheon, which was enjoyed to the full by the hungry excursionists. Gearhart park is one of nature's fine works, situated near the beach and large enough to meet any requirements for all time to come. Its dense woods of turge spruce and fir, beneath whose limbs is spread a carpet of thick moss, softer than velvet, clear of all underbrush and thickly sprinkled with handsome ferns, offers a most delightful resort. The large hotel buildings, to which recent additions have been made, situated upon the edge of the park, contain ninety-five rooms with accommodations for 300 guests. The 14 grounds about the buildings are beautiful, with large flower gardens, while numerous hammocks swung among the trees invite the afternoon siesta. Two lawn tennis courts and several croquet grounds are laid out upon the lawn and a pastime for all. end, One party of guests dispersed themselves through the park and upon the beach during Sunday afternoon, while some of them had a Methodist camp meeting in the parlors. All had laid aside business cares and seemed to greatly appreclate the relaxation from its strict demands. The children made high sport on the beach, taking great delight in digging their bare feet into the warm sands and in tracing maps and houses in it with sharp sticks and to see the figures washed away by the incoming tides. A sumptuous Sunday dinner was served at 6 o'clock. All were in good spirits which reached their culmination when Mr. Hammond rose to explain the cause of Mr. Ben Young's hypnotic state of mind. After dinner all hands again adjourned to the seashore, the great attractive feature to every one. The boundless deep ever the same yet ever changing, some times sportive and again dashing with irresistable force against the shore, is emblematic of the eternity of the uni verse and the great powers of life and death. The golden rays of the setting sun cast a path of light over the calm surface of the water, seemingly pointing the way to some future abode of promise Suddenly disappearing, it seemed molten ball dropping into the sea, and one almost watched to see the rising

Lingering in the twilight, loath to leave so charming a scene, the party finally gathered about the evening camp fire of driftwood.
