Yesterday was a perfect summer day, and Irish like, the common greeting on the street was "it's a gran' fine day." An inspiring sight was presented on the bay in the late afternoon. A stiff breeze sprung up and almost the entire fishing fleet, some 800 boats, started out at the same time, all apparently making for a common point in Baker's Bay, listed to the same side and dashing the spray right and left, truly made a picture well worth remembering. The declining sun lighted up the scene and made the white sails of the rapidly retreating boats stand out like cameos in a setting of gold.
