One Selection Offered, but No Definite Action Taken—Engineer Curtis Goes to Portland.

Yesterday was a typical Astoria day, bright and pleasantly warm. The streets were filled with people and a general air of cheerfulness and prosperity pervaded the town. A number from the country spent the day in trading and talking, while a number of strangers were upon the streets. A perceptible improvement in business has taken place and people from abroad are coming in to enter the race for profitable investments. New offices are being opened, business enterprises arranged, and the foundations rapidly laid for the growth and enlargement of the city. Already the railroad has so changed the aspect of affairs that one scarcely recognizes the place as the same town of three months ago.

The railroad officials were very busy yesterday getting details into shape for construction work and long strides were taken in the matter of preliminaries. Without having had actual experience one can scarcely realize the large amount of work that must be done in connection with the construction of a new line, and each has his own idea of the proper way to do it. A large number of real estate transfers have already been made and a number of large tracts have been bonded at good prices. Back taxes are being paid and redemptions made from tax sales. It is fair to presume that the tide has turned and an era of prosperity opened for this city and local vicinity.

STATE NEWS.

Interesting items culled from Oregon's Leading Newspapers.

News received Tuesday from Vale, Malheur county, says the La Grande Chronicle, stated that the sheriff had succeeded in locating the safe crackers who robbed Hop's safe on the 18th inst. They already have one man in custody, and have the other cornered on an island in the Snake river near Weiser. The man they caught had sixty dollars in two-cent postage stamps and a funnel for inserting powder in safes.

The wool season is over and the next crop to be harvested will be grain. A large yield is expected, and what is equally as encouraging to farmers, the market shows a firmness with prospects of an increasing price. The activity of the wool season will be repeated at the warehouses by the large amount of what handled. We expect as much grain will be marketed this year as at any former season.

The Dalles Chronicle says: "W. H. Turner, the real estate agent at Goldendale who mysteriously disappeared several days ago, has been found. The searching party discovered him at a place about four miles from Goldendale. The unfortunate man is undoubtedly demoralized, and refused to go with the men who came to find him. At last accounts he was untraced."

A flock of 800 sheep, says the Tribune, was driven through the city last Sunday; they came from Yuma, Arizona, and the destination was Portland. They were a part of a train load of 4,000 that was shipped by Mr. Dawson of Yuma, to the Chicago market. This is the second venture of the shipper, who realized a satisfactory profit from the first one.

The case of J. W. Beckley against the Upjohn Navigation company, brought to recover damages for clothing lost some time ago, while Mrs. Beckley was en route to Myrtle Point on one of the company's steamers, was called in Justice Smith's court, at Elkhart, the 28th inst. It resulted in a compromise and was settled.

A deed of unselfish heroism, and one worthy of recognition by the Oregon Humane society, was that of Dr. A. C. Panton, of this city, who, at the peril of his own life, rescued the child of an utter stranger which had fallen into a foul vault and saved it from a horrible death by asphyxiation.—Telegram.

Baker City, says the Democrat, is infected at this time with tramps, who are stealing everything they can lay their hands on and tormenting housewives to the extreme.

MME. BERNHARDT'S COSTUMES.

Mme. Sarah Bernhardt, in Sadermann's play of "Magda," is as splendidly dressed as we are worth to see her; but her magnificence becomes all the more admirable from being put in a setting of ultra-daintiness. The scene is in gold and the four acts pass in a typical German parlor. Brown tulle covers the floor, and upon that is laid a square carpet of blindingly bright design. There is the halcyon of a mother in brown moire and black silk jacket that regards not the figure's outline, and a younger sister in gray cashmere with cross-way bands of tawny silk, made a capital entourage for the arrival of Magda, the erring but successful member of the family.

For her entry Mme. Bernhardt wears a superb cloak of mauve velvet lined with fur. As she flings this off she exhibits herself in a more delicate gown of amber, with a large white water lily. The big flowers embroidered in gold and crystal, the sleeves of yellow chiffon do not pretend to cover the arm, for they are turned back from the shoulder with a graduated band of tulle and black silk, and a similar band is twisted about the waist to form a girdle and in its folds nestles a large white water lily. The bodice is likewise composed almost entirely of yellow chiffon, which falls low over the waist, and between the folds of which are placed long chains of gold sequins.

The returned prodigal appears the following morning at the hour of the German coffee-drinking in a dress of white moire, edged, wherever edging is possible, with sable. This garment is furnished with sleeves which, however, are only composed of strands of ribbon, so that agreeable revelations of the arms are not infrequent. Over the moire is worn a clinging belt of silver sequins, which is prolonged at each side into a long scarf, so as to suggest a silver tunic. The entire front of the gown is draped with a design in circles of diamante, pearls, and amethysts—gems which she afterwards places herself in tearing from the bosom of the gown to cast them at the feet of the young troubadour who dotes of love for her. A group of white-robed maidens and children, who scatter flowers and wave centers around the poet's deathbed add to the beauty of the scene.—The London Queen.

The latest change brought against the bicycle is that it injures the bookmaker's trade. Books never have the same sale in summer as in winter. Despite the fact that paper-covered novels are in demand by the loungers on the shore, but this year there is said to be more than usual depression in trade. The wheelman is blamed for this, as it is logically argued that while indulging in his favorite pastime he cannot possibly be reading a book, and that when he gets home from his spin he is too tired to read. As the cycling craze is increasing, the result of its growth upon literature would make an interesting study.—Philadelphia Record.

A PLAINTIVE WAIL.

The joys of this world, how they vanish in a vapor. The thrills that enliven all our souls with delight. When once they are burst—dye they're simply burnt paper. And patchwork fireworks soon fade out of sight.

'Tis sad to believe that black powder costs money. A bill seems so easy until one has met it; And quickly we find that the pie and the honey

Are all gone to Hades, and don't you forget it!
