

An English Prince sailed across to invade Ireland in the long ago. Nearing the hostile shore, he said to his men: "I'll know and catch the man whose hand first touches the shore." Seizing an axe, one of his hardy braves chopped off his hand and tossed it on the beach. He won the prince's prize.

We chopped off a very large slice from the price of Granite Ware, judging from the remarks of those ladies who came in and got the prizes yesterday.

Lots of hem carried away those covered jelly glasses we are selling for 34c a doz. too.

Railroad men complain of little or no travel this year to or from the east. The transcontinental sleepers are making the run across the continent with only one or two through passengers and sometimes none at all. It is a notable fact that fall eastern emigration is slow here, and there have expressed regret that they came. There has been no emigration whatever this year but all railroad lines figure on large emigration next year to the Pacific Northwest.

The body of Louis Bilger, the third of the unfortunate men who lost their lives on the yacht Monogram the first day of the regatta, was found Sunday morning by Earl Williams, a young boy, on the rocks near Tillamook Head. A watch and chain, gold ring, and £ in money were found on the dead man. The body will probably be taken to Jacksonville for burial.

Is "Nagging" a Weakness Characteristic of Women? Is nagging an especial characteristic of women? A well known student of health as well as disease, has called out indignantly by printing the word "nagging" in his book. He has done it the most considerate way, commending the person who, in calling another a "nag," said he did not mean it opprobriously, but merely stated it as a fact. And the denials are made in a fashion quite too feminine. "It isn't so, and besides there is good excuse for it," our defendant says. "Nagging is a narrow, and belittling epithet, the constant presence of obnoxious and vexatious persons—what wonder that human nature should rebel against them? There are occasions? It will do us no harm to look this accusation fairly in the face, and see whether it be a familiar of ours or not." "Nagging" is a word which is not in the dictionary at hand and I cannot verify my definition, but I suppose that what is meant by the word "nagging" is a constant repetition of reproach or command. It is a habit which every conscientious housekeeper and every thoughtful mother is very much in danger of contracting. It is a habit which of which many a woman "lets things go," to the injury of her home and her children. How often the tired mother who has had a long day's work, and whose children or dog have done the forgotten errand rather than seem to be "nagging."

It does fall to the lot of women to do most of the training of children. In many cases it is truly the blind leading the blind, the untrained training. "Don't do this," "hurry up," "be quiet," "stop that," "be good," "be乖 of the tongue. Who that has traveled has failed to notice the mother who nagged her office of despot by irritating demands and commands, disturbing every one within hearing and seeing by her vain efforts to keep her children still? She has not learned self control, and is transmitting her lack of it to the next generation.

But we are improving, I am sure. We are learning that to save ourselves and our children from "nagging" we must cultivate calmness. There must be peace in the soul of the mother before her babe is born, and then, O, those precious words, "Be still, and know that I am God." Let us have quiet hours for an acquaintance with the new life. How foolish she is who throws away that sacred opportunity, choosing to spend her time in "nagging" rather than to retreat for a time from the world and be led by her little child into the holy of holies. Life would be very different in many homes if the babe were thus introduced to it. And it is not so impossible as it may seem. Remember that these quiet days may save you and your children months of anguish. And later, how much can be done to avoid this perpetual "nagging" if the sympathies of the husband and the children can be enlisted in the object to be attained. Baby will enjoy making the room tidy for papa's home coming if she is doing it with mamma, and a habit of order will be established much more certainly when she acts under the impulse of sympathy than when under the pressure of a mistake, too. Think that true obedience to the parent or teacher who is continually commanding is the best thing that can be done. Let us have quiet hours for an acquaintance with the new life. Baby will enjoy making the room tidy for papa's home coming if she is doing it with mamma, and a habit of order will be established much more certainly when she acts under the impulse of sympathy than when under the pressure of a mistake, too. Think that true obedience to the parent or teacher who is continually commanding is the best thing that can be done. Let us have quiet hours for an acquaintance with the new life. How foolish she is who throws away that sacred opportunity, choosing to spend her time in "nagging" rather than to retreat for a time from the world and be led by her little child into the holy of holies. Life would be very different in many homes if the babe were thus introduced to it. And it is not so impossible as it may seem. Remember that these quiet days may save you and your children months of anguish. And later, how much can be done to avoid this perpetual "nagging" if the sympathies of the husband and the children can be enlisted in the object to be attained.
