"LOCAL OPTION IN CITIES."

The state campaign in New York is of interest all over the country because a local issue has been injected into it. It is, whether the opening of the saloons on Sunday shall be allowed in New York City and other municipalities. This is made an issue, because of the strict enforcement of the "maine laws" which forbid the opening of saloons on Sunday, by Roosevelt and his fellow police commissioners of New York City.

Roosevelt took the common sense ground that it was his duty to enforce the law; and that, if any law is offensive to the people, the true course is to attempt its repeal, not to violate it, or wink at its violation. In this he is unquestionably right.

The Tammany leaders at once took up the cry against the Sunday closing provision of the excise law, and demand that the legislature shall pass a law which shall allow the question to be submitted to the voters of each city whether the saloons shall not be allowed to remain open at certain hours on Sunday.

They call this "local option in cities." The term, however, is misleading to all outside of New York, for local option is everywhere understood to mean the privilege of voting whether to allow saloons at all, or to prohibit them.

The term "local option in cities" means in the state of New York, whether the Sunday opening of saloons shall be legalized or not.

The Republicans of the state, at the Saratoga convention, embodied this plank in their platform: "We favor the maintenance of the Sunday laws, in the interest of labor and morality." That commits the party against the proposition to allow the Sunday opening of saloons to be legalized.

The Democratic state convention, under the control of Senator Hill and Tammany, adopted a plank taking opposite ground. While it is not frank and clear as the Republican one, it can bear but one interpretation, and that is in favor of allowing the cities to legalize Sunday saloons by a majority vote.

That is the issue which bids fair to be the deciding one in the battle between the two great parties in New York. The enormous Democratic vote of the city of New York will be solidly for the Sunday saloon, and the Democracy will have the aid of the entire voting interest throughout the state, with all the votes it controls, as well as a voting element either foreign born or born of foreign parents, which has generally been Republican on national issues. It remains to be seen whether the elements which favor the maintenance of the Sunday laws will have voting strength enough to defeat this combination.

Every friend of temperance in the United States will anxiously watch the outcome. If the Democrats win, and a Democratic legislature gives to the voters of each city the privilege of deciding by their ballots whether Sunday saloons shall be legalized, we may expect a similar movement in all the other states which have large cities.

When the house committee on ways and means was considering the tariff bill, during the fall of 1894, the Democratic members under the lead of Congressman Wilson, insisted that the ad valorem duties were the best. In doing this they ignored the experiences of the treasury department for many years, as well as those of every country in the world. It is now admitted by some treasury officials that Secretary Carlisle was not as high an opinion of the ad valorem system as the law had been it was actively put in operation. It was one of the arguments made by Governor McKinley that ad valorem duties encouraged under valuations, and that it was just what the treasury department has learned in the year that the Wilson-Gorman-Brice tariff bill has been in force. They have been making a study of the various duties collected under ad valorem which shows rates are ad valorem are less than anticipated, because of under valuations. This is another instance of the superiority of Carlisle's findings as compared with his foresight.

We commend the following item from the Evening Telegram to the careful and powerful consideration of the people of Astoria and Clatsop county:

In the matter of good roads a striking inconsistency is exhibited by some of Oregon's rural politicians and newspaper editors. They would like to see a road promoter visit these papers and persons and lay before them a proposition to build a railroad if they vote a bond issue, and the chances are ten to one that the question of expense would be overlooked in contemplation of the benefits promised by the scheme. They would regard the railroad as a blessing because it would enable them to get the products of their district to market more rapidly and at a less cost than any method of individual transportation, but they can hardly be convinced that a solid highway from their district to the railroad would be almost as great a blessing. That is where their inconsistency comes in. A good road from the farm to the railroad station is just as valuable to the farmer—just as much a saver of time and money—as the railroad itself. Good roads are an economy. The rural politician would be satisfied if that by considering the immediacy of the loads that one or two horses can haul over a well paved city street and contacting how many horses would be required to drag the same burden over a rough clay road.

HAS HARRISON WITHDRAWN?

The statement is going the rounds that ex-President Harrison has decided to withdraw from the race for the presidential nomination next year, and the reason assigned is that he finds the Republicans of Pennsylvania and New York against him, and thus deems the contest hopeless. It is stated that he has made Governor McKinley his political foe.

There are no means of ascertaining whether this report be true, unless Mr. Harrison should see fit to enter a formal denial. There is one fact in it that is not the first choice of the Republican organization in the two greatest states of the Union. This is certainly a handicap, but men have gone into conventions and won the nomination, even with similar odds against them.

Very few aspirants for a presidential nomination ever abandon the field until some one else is put in nomination. The prize seems in such cases too tempting to relinquish voluntarily.

The announcement is made by a leading medical society in Philadelphia that consumption is decidedly on the wane in that city. From 1861 to 1887 the average number of deaths per year from the disease was 800, and for the last seven years the average was 264. Taking into account the increase in population, the decline in the mortality from consumption has been over 30 per cent in fourteen years. Physicians in the city attribute the marked change to the improved paving, cleaning and sewerage of streets and alleys, and to the greater caution exercised in dealing with the disease as probably contagious. The figures are a striking example of the vital importance of municipal and personal cleanliness.

It is a significant fact that not one member of Cleveland's present cabinet was a federal soldier, and that the men who were prominent in saving the union are unrepresented in the country's government. With the death of Secretary Gresham, the only Union soldier who has at any time been connected in any important degree with this administration disappeared. On the contrary, nearly every department of the government is controlled and run by men who were either actively or passively identified with the attempt to break up the Union; two cabinet officers, namely, Secretary Herbert and Postmaster General Wilson, were distinguished soldiers in the Confederate army.

The Japanese are planting American machinery by the wholesale. It is said they now make a great number of machines, patented in America, including Fairbanks scales and the latest Hoe printing presses. They avail themselves of American inventive genius, and of their own skill in imitation and produce machinery which is practically exact duplication of American originals. They lack invention, but make up for it by their talent for theft and their marvelous use of power. And there is no remedy for the Yankee inventors.

The reports of leading trade journals show that the larger part of the increases of wages, over those paid under Republican rule, were increased only one paper. The workmen who were the beneficiaries of such advances are not likely to do much cheering during the next campaign for the party which brought them about. They now have too much hard sense.

Two hundred and seventy-five thousand horses thrown out of use in the United States has an indirect influence on the price of horseflesh all over the world. The cheapness of transportation across the Atlantic permits their shipment to England at a very low cost, and American horses are already finding their way to English stable studs.

In all probability that September treasury surplus has been more than eaten up if the "economies" through which it was obtained have been as far from this amount. The country has had more than enough of the Democratic plan of "reducing" the bills by not paying them until next month or next year.

Dr. Price's Cream Baking Powder Contains no Ammonia or Alum.

IT IS TOO MUCH FOR THEM.

Kansas City Journal. It has been announced on what may be considered very good authority, that the Democrats will not bring tariff discussion into the next campaign, and that no effort will be made to either increase or lower rates nor make any change whatever in that direction to increase the revenues of the country. Mr. Wilson says he is fully satisfied with the working of the law as it is, and declares that it has done all that was expected of it. In the face of the fact that it was promised that the "markets of the world" would be opened to the American producer, exports have continuously decreased. The American workman was assured that he would have more work to do, notwithstanding all the talk that is made about increased wages and returning industrial activity during the present season, there has been but a partial recovery from almost total stagnation and threatened starvation, and there is no prospect or possibility of a restoration of former prosperity until the legislation enacted by the Democratic congress shall be either greatly modified or wholly wiped out.

The Democrats, when they had finished the Ozman monstrous, did they had only made a start in the direction aimed at and the hope of putting the country on a free trade basis was only begun. They promised that it would be pushed to the end. Why is it that they have backed down if it is not for the reason that they are convinced that their entire scheme has been proven a failure.

The people need no further enlightenment, for they have had the subject put before them in a never to be forgotten object lesson. Mr. Wilson may be well pleased with the result, but the vote cast at the elections last year show that the consensus of public opinion is against him.

A DECEPTIVE CIRCULAR.

New York Tribune. "Circular No. 3" prepared under the immediate supervision of the secretary of agriculture, by the "section of foreign markets," has just been published. It opens with a statement, or admission of heretofore a confession, that they have made a miserable failure of the whole business.

It is a deceptive circular, and one that will be likely to puzzle as well as startle the farmers of the United States, who have learned to pin their faith as to the honesty, or admission of heretofore a confession, that they have made a miserable failure of the whole business.

SAILOR MAID.

She's as trim and trig as the tautest rig. That she was seen on the sea; In her jutting gown from foot to crown She's fair as a maid may be. She can rest and tack like a "Jolly Jack" Though the billows chop and churn, And she knows the ropes as a hard his tropes From the bowpost to the stern.

She is up and out with a laugh at doubt Though the whistling gale be high And a deep-sea blue is the winking hue Of her charming weather eye. There's not a pink on the ocean's brink In the heart of a blustering shell That can match the glint of the tanned tint Of her soft cheek's delicate swell.

Ah! happy she that can dance and dip With her gown from the delf and shore, For she's a friend to the wind that blows behind And she's a foe to the wind that blows before! With such a lure, O my lady, be sure I shall try the life of a tar. And sail away to Portugal Bay, With Love for a guiding star.
